Acknowledgments

Many wonderful relationships have inspired and supported the creation of this book. Dr Cheryl Picard, as a stellar “pracademic” and galvanizing mentor, gave me tools and inspiration that have transformed my life. Dr Janet Siltanen was my perceptive, compassionate, and protective midwife into scholarship. Dr Ken Melchin’s gifts to this work were his brilliance of mind and his heart. I am grateful to the participants in the case studies, who leaned into the challenge of conflict and were generous in their spirit of mutual inquiry as well as their delight in discovery. They dispelled for me the illusion of the isolated researching mind.

My beloved friends and colleagues Jamie Price and Vieve Price have helped me immeasurably through their foundational, creative, and spiritual pathfinding. My mentor Garry Powell provided me with the treasures of emotional and intellectual support, helping me to balance the demands of research with the process of living a complex life. John Radford has influenced me deeply with his skills as a master practitioner and a humble, courageous soul.

Dr Megan Price, with her luminous intelligence, has given me clarity and warmth, and the growing community of Insight practitioners, professionals, artists, and scholars gives me hope for the future. My colleagues at Royal Roads University have created a supportive and stimulating context in which to learn and grow. In particular, the students in the university’s Conflict Analysis and Management program have challenged and inspired me to keep evolving as a companion in their learning journeys, and I frequently marvel at the many ways that they show up for this difficult work.
My mother, Helen, gave me the gifts of her superb writing, wit, and constant cheerleading, and my father, Will, provided me with an early foundation in rigorous thinking. My siblings, Carolyn, David, and Grace, helped me to learn in childhood the benefits of a good fight when the prize is reconciliation, which has matured into the inseparable bonds of family.

Moneca Kaiser’s creation of a writing group and loving friendship was instrumental to this work. Alison Van Rooy’s extraordinarily intelligent and sensitive reading of the manuscript made it possible to complete. I would not be at this place in my life without Andrea Lorient’s place in my heart, and Ellen Travis has been a gentle harbour for me since I was a young adult.

Khadija Coxon at McGill-Queen’s University Press saw and supported the potential of this book, and editor Julie McGonegal made it a more readable text. Dr David Peddle richly influenced the evolution of the manuscript with his Insight wisdom, humour, and editorial acumen.

My daughters, Sage and Roma, are the delights of my heart, inspiring me and teaching me the lessons that only deep love can provide. And my partner, Georgine – intelligent, beautiful, generous, and strong – is truly my other half, building the boat for us to row, doing most of the rowing, and keeping us warm with the sunshine of her love. Thank you.
