Contents

Acknowledgments  vii

Canada beyond “the Usual Records”  | 3
Ann Shteir

PART ONE
Approaching Lady Dalhousie: New Resources, New Perspectives
1 A Botanical Journey of Discovery: Lady Dalhousie in British
North America  | 37
Deborah Reid

2 Lady Dalhousie’s Orchids and Other Rare Plants in Lower Canada,
1820–1828: Resources for Historical Study  | 70
Jacques Cayouette and Faye-Yin Khoo

3 Gender, Botany, and Imperial Networks: Reflections on a Letter  | 100
Virginia Vandenberg

PART TWO
Collecting and Its Contexts
4 “I dare not say Botanical … Mine is a real love for flowers”:
Mary Brenton in 1830s Newfoundland  | 133
Ann Shteir

5 Baron Ferdinand von Mueller’s Plant Collectors: At Home with the
Australian Flora  | 158
Sara Maroske

6 Alice Hollingworth, Early Botanical Explorer in Muskoka District,
Ontario  | 186
James Pringle
PART THREE
Natural History “Old” and “New”
7 Catharine Parr Traill: A Natural Historian in Changing Times | 217
   Michael Peterman

8 “Botany … a Prominent Study”: Isabella McIntosh’s Ferns and Natural History in 1860s Montreal | 247
   Karen Stanworth

PART FOUR
Seeing and Making
9 Botanical Albums as Theoretical Objects: Sophie Pemberton and the Logic of Identity | 281
   Kristina Huneault

10 Slips and Seeds: Botany and Horticulture in Two Nineteenth-Century Canadian Quilts | 320
   Vanessa Nicholas

PART FIVE
Expanding Public Practices
11 Botanical Gardens in Nineteenth-Century Canada: Individuals and Institutions | 347
   David Galbraith

12 Women, Citizen Science, and Botanical Knowledge in Ontario, 1870–1920 | 378
   Dawn R. Bazely and Kathryn McPherson

   Afterword: Finding Meaning in the Understory | 403
   Suzanne Zeller

Tables and Figures | 415
Contributors | 423
Index | 427