ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

There are many people who deserve recognition and thanks for their diverse contributions in bringing this book into the world. Foremost, my years as a member of the Coalition for an Ethical Psychology have been transformative for me, offering camaraderie, purpose, and an intellectual and activist home of the rarest sort. I will always value the friendship, insights, and inspiration that Jean Maria Arrigo, Trudy Bond, Yosef Brody, Brad Olson, Steven Reisner, Stephen Soldz, and Bryant Welch have provided. Without them, Doing Harm would never have been written.

I’ve also learned a tremendous amount and found invaluable support from my involvement with Psychologists for Social Responsibility and the broader community of dissident psychologists who refused to be sidelined or silenced. Colleagues to whom I owe a debt of gratitude, both for their efforts and for their example, include Dan Aalbers, Neil Altman, Ghislaine Boulanger, Martha Davis, Serdar Degirmencioglu, Sarah Dougherty, Diane Ehrensaft, Ruth Fallenbaum, Sharon Gadberry, Rebecca Gordon, Gerald Gray, Ian Hansen, Michael Jackson, Jeffrey Kaye, Paul Kimmel, Jeanne LeBlanc, Alice LoCicero, Jancis Long, Brinton Lykes, Kathie Malley-Morrison, Tony Marsella, Jack O’Brien, Susan Opotow, Robert Parker, Mary Pelton-Cooper, Marc Pilisuk, Ken Pope, Deborah Popowski, Nathaniel Raymond, Gil Reyes, Alice Shaw, Frank Summers, and Michael Wessells (and more).

Doing Harm benefited considerably from countless engaging discussions, as well as specific feedback and recommendations from close colleagues and other experts. In addition to three anonymous readers who were generous with their time and knowledge, particular thanks for reviewing the manuscript – in whole or in part – go again to my Coalition colleagues, as well as Dan Aalbers, Mandy Conrad, David Frakt, Ellen Gerrity, Ian Hansen, Susan Opotow, and Jake Romm.
From draft manuscript to published book, the dedicated staff at McGill-Queen’s University Press brought their expertise and enthusiasm to Doing Harm. I extend my appreciation to all of them, including those whose names I do not know. Emily Andrew, my editor at MQUP, has been extraordinary, an expert guide and teacher, and a staunch advocate throughout the entire process; I thank Peter Agree for helping me find my way to her. Jared Toney was a painstaking copyeditor, never blanching at the necessity of re-reading the manuscript, again and again. Managing editor Kathleen Fraser coordinated all the moving parts without a hitch. My thanks go as well to attorneys Carolyn Schurr Levin and Julius Grey for their thorough legal vetting of the book.

I also want to express my deep admiration for the essential and courageous work of the individuals and groups that, for years, have persisted in revealing and challenging the US government’s decision to engage in abuse and torture as part of its so-called war on terror. Among others, I recognize here the journalists who were steadfast in their coverage of these horrors, the attorneys who were tireless in defending the due process rights of detainees, and the organizations that fearlessly placed their commitment to human rights above considerations of politics or popularity.

Last, but certainly not least, I thank members of my family for their immeasurable support and encouragement throughout this project. And as with so many other endeavors – of all sorts – over the past five decades, I can never adequately express my gratitude to my wife Judy, whose consistent engagement and well-timed reassurances kept me going, and whose commitment to repairing the world continues to inspire me every day.
