ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

It is a pleasure to acknowledge the help I’ve received in writing this book. Some of it is obvious, some of it less so, since it is not easy to see the actual support structures that undergird anything one does.

I want, first of all, to recognize the assistance I have gotten over the past two years from my former student, Julian Fox. I enlisted him not only as assistant during the pandemic but also as junior colleague in this project: to aid me in tackling the work involved in permissions, production matters, and much else. His intelligence and generosity have been instrumental in the final stages of this work.

I want also to thank, formally, Anne Savarese at Princeton University Press for the sustained good will, critical acumen, and belief in me that I have felt during this entire project. Her diplomacy and clear-eyed sense of both my argument and my words have been invaluable to me. And I am in debt to the whole Princeton team, as I went through the copyediting and proofing of my manuscript. What might have been daunting turned out to be engaging.

My remaining acknowledgments are less obvious and direct, but arguably deeper still, longitudinal, and constituting much of the ground I stand on. Brown University has been the locus of my entire professional life, and I have benefitted immeasurably from its liberal culture and its student-centered curriculum, open to experiment and interdisciplinary forays. Some of this appears directly in my text. Much of it goes unsignaled, not easy to see. I can scarcely imagine what my life and work would have been elsewhere.

Finally, as in all my books, I salute the central influence of my wife, Ann Weinstein. Her wisdom, wit, and critical spirit have, sometimes like a whetstone, sharpened my mind; her native compass and sense of relative weights and measures have ever played a role in shaping my vision. She is my North Star.

Credits

Excerpt(s) from The Three Theban Plays by Sophocles, translated by Robert Fagles, translation copyright © 1982, 1984 by Robert Fagles. Used by permission of Viking Books, an imprint of Penguin Publishing Group, a division of Penguin Random House LLC. All rights reserved.

“An Urban Convalescence” from Collected Poems by James Merrill, copyright © 2001 by the Literary Estate of James Merrill at Washington University. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, an imprint of the Knopf Doubleday Publishing Group, a division of Penguin Random House LLC. All rights reserved.