The genesis of this book was in a Lund bookshop in 1967 when, as a history undergraduate at Edinburgh University, I bought Wahlbäck and Boberg’s recently published collection of documents on Sweden and the war. The interest that this subject created remained with me for many years until, when teaching post-graduates on the Second World War MSc course at Edinburgh, I complained to my colleague, Jill Stephenson, about the paucity of material about wartime Sweden in English for students, particularly in relation to the Home Front. With her encouragement and that of the series editors, Paul Addison and Jeremy Crang, this book has been written.

Such an enterprise can only stand on the shoulders of others in the field and publications containing their research, findings and conclusions are listed in the Bibliography with admiration, appreciation and gratitude. In addition, the staff at the National Archives; Riksarkivet, Kungliga biblioteket, and Arbetsrörelsens arkivet in Stockholm; Edinburgh University Library and the National Library of Scotland have patiently and professionally supported my research.

Many friends and colleagues have also provided encouragement and advice. I want to thank particularly Paul Addison, Donald Bloxham, Gunilla Blom-Thomsen, Peter Graves, David Sugden and Neville Wylie for adding to their busy lives to provide feedback and comment without which this work would be much poorer. Encouragement, assistance and background information have also come from the late Lt Commander Dan Gibson-Harris in Ottawa, Ambassadors Leif Leifland and John Grant, and Philip Mallet who has also kindly allowed me to quote from his father’s unpublished memoirs. I also wish to thank Curtis Brown Group Ltd, London on behalf of David Mitchell for permission to quote from Cloud Atlas, and Prospect Publishing Ltd on behalf of Walter Russel Mead for permission to quote from Prospect Magazine. For permission to reproduce photos, I would like to thank SVT Imagebank and PA Photos.

The generosity over the years of Jonas and Maja Frykman in Lund, Nils and Gun Peterson, the late Ingvar Tagtström and Ulla in Stockholm, Peter Bares and Eva Viktorsson in Göteborg, Brita and Torsten Nilsson and Lisa Andersson in Staffanstorp, and Britta Sugden in Edinburgh has allowed me to connect with Sweden in a way that has sustained my inner dialogue about this subject.

Finally, in preparing this book, I have depended on, and valued the unstinting support, tolerance, encouragement and advice from my wife Elspeth who has had to live with the intrusion of this demanding venture into our lives. Without her, this work would not have happened.
