Acknowledgements

In my capacity as the series co-editor and co-creator, I offer my deepest thanks to Gary Needham, a great scholar, colleague and friend, for coming up with the idea for American Indies and for inviting me to participate in his vision. I am extremely grateful to Edinburgh University Press for commissioning the series, as well as a number of other books in the field of American independent cinema.

A number of film and media scholars have contributed in various ways to this project. Gary Needham consistently provided constructive comments on various chapters, and Lydia Papadimitriou and Claire Molloy offered advice on various drafts of the book. Frank Krutnik, Warren Buckland and Peter Krämer gave valuable early criticisms on what eventually became Chapter 5. Rigas Goulimaris, Eleftheria Thanouli and Karen Ross engaged in many insightful discussions on the subject of film studies in general and American independent cinema in particular. Julia Hallam, a great friend and colleague, provided me with the ideal environment in which to pursue my scholarly interests in the School of Politics and Communication at the University of Liverpool.

My family and friends have supported me in numerous ways. I would especially like to thank my parents, Panayiotis and Christina Tzioumakis; Patroula Vrantza-Tzioumakis; Christina Tzioumakis; Panayiotis, Dimitra, Fenia and Ioanna Koutakis; Harris, Jason and Orestes Papadopoulos; Maria Goulimari; and Katerina Yanniki. I would also like to thank Frank Halligan; Sheena Streather; Julie Butler; Linda Crane; Paul Shaughnessy; Yolanda Akil-Perez; Adriana Shaughnessy-Akil; Lisa Anderson; Utpal Shah; Ben Howarth; Joanne Whiteside; Andy, Ruby and Esme Stockell; Alex Weir; Jim Friel; Roger and Maggie Lincoln; and Carys, Alex and James Damon. I wish to acknowledge the support and friendship of the late Paresh Lad.
I have taught The Spanish Prisoner in my module on American independent cinema for many years. At least 200 students have watched the film with me, many of whom made invaluable contributions in class discussions and influenced the approach this book has taken, especially Becky Thurston, Claire McGlasham and Dan Gage, who in the final year of their degree became my research assistants during this project.

Finally, there are two people who have exerted, for different reasons, the most influence on this book: Harris Tlas, with whom I have spent endless hours talking about confidence games and watching con artist and con game films and TV shows; and Siân Lincoln, who has embarked with me on this journey and whose love, devotion, understanding and support have guided me, especially through the writing stage of this project. Thanks so much to you both.

I am indebted to the Velvet Light Trap for allowing me to reproduce as Chapter 2 of this book a revised version of my essay: ‘Marketing David Mamet: Institutionally Assigned Film Authorship and Contemporary American Cinema’, which first appeared in The Velvet Light Trap, No. 57, Spring 2006, pp. 60–75. Copyright © 2006 by the University of Texas Press. All rights reserved.
For my brother,

Leonidas

For his love and support and for being my ‘accomplice’ in the appreciation of many ‘indie’ cinematic treasures over the years