Acknowledgments

The text for this book came into existence in 1979 as a Ph.D. dissertation for the Department of Geography at McGill University under the supervision of Sherry Olson, whose contribution is hereby gratefully acknowledged. Since then it has undergone many revisions, under the guidance of anonymous readers and with the help of the late David Alexander and Keith Matthews, of Memorial University of Newfoundland, who gave unstintingly of their time and wisdom. I want to thank my friend, Patricia A. Thornton, of Concordia University, for her constant encouragement, for advice on matters demographic, and for help with mapping and the tabulation of data. Gregory S. Kealey and Alan G. Macpherson, both of Memorial University, read an earlier draft of the manuscript and offered editorial advice; along with Peter Goheen of Queen’s University, they provided needed support and encouragement during the preparation of the book. I am particularly grateful to Daniel Vickers, of Memorial University, whose detailed editorial and contextual comments and criticism at several stages in the writing process were invaluable. I must have tried his patience sorely, but he never let it show.

My thanks and appreciation are due to many people in Canada and Great Britain. In Canada, I wish to thank Larry McCann (Mount Allison University) and Gordon Handcock and William Schrank (Memorial University of Newfoundland) for useful criticism, advice, and information; and Ernie Forbes (University of New Brunswick) for his encouragement. I owe a special debt to the late Mr and Mrs Arthur LeGros of Paspébiac for the interviews they granted me, and for permission to study the documents of Charles Robin and Company (CRC) in their private possession. Mr LeGros was an expert on the firm, and he generously shared with me many of his insights, adding enormously to my knowledge of the firm and the trade. I also wish to thank Gloria de Blazio and Dorothy Savoie, both of Montreal, for interviews they granted. I am likewise grateful to David McDougall and the late Mrs McDougall, of Montreal, as well as Clarence LeBreton, of the Acadian Village, Caraquet, for the many fruitful discussions I had with them on the subject of Gaspé itself as well as on CRC.

In Jersey, my thanks go first and foremost to the staff of La Société Jersiaise in St Helier. In particular, I was helped enormously by Barbara deVeulle, Margaret Syvret, Joan Stevens, Henry Perrée, Helen McCready, and John Appleby. I also wish to thank Mr Antil and Mr Falle, of the Jersey Library, the Honourable Secretary of the Jersey Chamber of Commerce, and Mr Palmer, of the Bureau des Impôts, Jersey, and his staff. Philip deVeulle, Frank LeMaistre, Jennifer Mullins, Reg Nicolle, John Norman, Mr Gates, and Mr Slauenwhite (the last two of the Royal Trust of Canada, Jersey Branch), Lewis Gibaut, Mary Clement-Robson, Mr and Mrs Guy Janvrin Robin, Nicholas Robin, and Lady Angela Walker all granted me interviews and treated me with courtesy and hospitality. This book would, quite simply, not have been possible without the assistance and interest of all of these people. My thanks are also due to the staffs of Custom House, Quality House, and the Public Record Office, all in London, England. Likewise, I received expert assistance from Ms Holmes of the Dorchester Record Office, and the staffs of the Mitchell Library (Glasgow), the Maritime History Archive (Newfoundland), the Public Archives of Nova Scotia, and the National Archives of Canada.

On a more personal level, I wish to thank Mr and Mrs Ashborn (St Helier), John and Maura Mannion (St John’s), the late Mr E.P.G. Thornton and Mrs Thornton (then of London), Andrea and Vincent Brogan (Glasgow), Ted and Margaret Palmer (Poole), Pat Thornton and David Shortall (Montreal and Ottawa), Bill Smith (Ottawa), and Jim and Milesza Gilmour (Ottawa) for their hospitality and assistance “in the field.” Jim Gilmour must bear the responsibility for having introduced me to export-base theory, although what I have done with it since then is not his fault. I am grateful to Chris Palmer for taking excellent care of four small children while I did fieldwork. My thanks go, as well, to Robin Craig, of St Margaret’s Bay, for hospitality, encouragement, and many valuable lessons on ships and shipping.

I am grateful to Routledge, Chapman and Hall, Inc., Business History, the Maritime Studies Research Unit of Memorial University, and Acadiensis for permission to reprint material previously published by them. The research for this work was funded by a McConnell Fellowship and two summer fellowships from McGill University, by a Bourse du Québec from the Gouvernement du Québec, and by a travel grant from the Institute of Social and Economic Research at Memorial University of Newfoundland. Thanks are due to all these bodies, as well as to Michael Staveley (Dean of Arts at Memorial) for financial assistance with cartography, and the Social Science Federation of Canada for the funding which enabled this book to be published. My heartfelt thanks go to Beverly Maher, who typed the final version of the manuscript, and to Colleen Dalton, Irene Whitfield, Joan Butler, and Diane Dawson, who, over several summers carefully and patiently typed earlier drafts. They kept me going with their interest and good humour. Cliff Wood, Gary McManus, and Dennis Curtis of the Geography Department and the Cartographic Laboratory at Memorial (MUNCL) designed and drew the maps and carefully refrained from expressing the horror they must have felt when they saw my original sketches; I am grateful to them for their professional skill and their personal tact.

My thanks are due also to Phillip Cercone, executive director of McGill-Queen’s University Press, Joan McGilvray, co-ordinating editor, and Käthe Roth, who copy edited the book, for making this an enjoyable and satisfying publishing experience.

Finally, I want to thank Anne Alexander, Andrea Brogan, Mike Browne, Moyra Buchan, Phil Buckner, Gale Burford, Marjory Campbell, Judy Fingard, Sandi Galloway, Gerry Hallowell, Colin Howell, Kathleen Hugessen, Martine Johnson, Linda Kealey, Zita Kelly, Kay Matthews, Lewis MacLeod, Stuart Pierson, Mickie Pitcher, Frank Remiggi, and Mark Shrimpton for being there in their own particular ways when I needed them. This book is dedicated to my children – Andy, Catriona, Ken, and Keith – who, sometimes gracefully, sometimes reluctantly, but always with love, tolerated the intrusions on their time that a project like this involves. They may not always have my time, but they have my unconditional love.
