I am indebted to several persons who helped in the preparation of this book. Two who participated actively are Marjorie L. Ruud, who made a substantial editorial contribution, and Professor Ken Papmehl, who freely gave of his knowledge of pre-revolutionary Russian culture and language. Professor Papmehl also deciphered and translated four letters.

Several colleagues in Moscow lent invaluable assistance. The first is V.A. Vdovin of the history faculty of Moscow State University, who was twice my generous-spirited adviser. S.I. Inikova, who knows the Sytin archives better than anyone else, gave me the benefit of her knowledge, as did E.A. Dinershtein of the All-Union Bibliographical Centre in Moscow, the author of the first book-length study of Sytin. V.I. Bovykin, also of the history faculty of Moscow University, was the willing impresario of a spirited seminar that included A.S. Bokhanov and N.A. Chlenova of the Institute of History, Academy of Sciences, USSR.

In the spring and summer of 1989 I benefited enormously from my informal association with the Sytin Museum recently established at 12 Gorky Street and with its staff: I.E. Matveeva, the director, and N.N. Aleshina, L.I. Maksimova, and V.V. Kirillov, her colleagues. I cannot thank them enough for their warm hospitality and for sharing with me their special knowledge of Sytin; and I owe much to Aleshina and Maksimova for the hours they spent deciphering Sytin’s handwriting and making sense of his convoluted and ungrammatical Russian prose. I also had skilled assistance with translation from E.A. Khvostova, a senior editor with the Academy of Sciences.

Thanks go, as well, to Linda Brock, Joanne Burns, Lori Morris, Pat Rosen, and Melanie Wolfe of The University of Western Ontario, who so willingly and expertly typed my manuscript.
Most of the research for this book was conducted in Moscow and, to a lesser degree, in Leningrad in 1981, 1984, and 1989, while I was a participant in the Exchange of Senior Research Scholars with the USSR Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education (now the State Committee for Education) administered by the International Research and Exchanges Board. Further study took place at Harvard University, when I was a Senior Scholar at the Russian Research Center in the spring of 1982, and in the D.B. Weldon Library, University of Western Ontario, through funds provided by the Dean of Social Science, The University of Western Ontario.

C.A.R.
London, Ontario
September 1989