I wish to express first my gratitude to the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada for its generous funding over the several years of research for this book, and to the Otto-Mann-Stiftung whose support in the last phase enabled me to complete it.

With sincere appreciation I turn then to an academic’s best friends, the librarians and archivists whose expertise and engaged assistance gave me such open access to the materials necessary for my investigation. My contact with them never failed to leave me with a sense of admiration for their professionalism, competence, and academic integrity. Foremost among these are Liselotte Homering, director of the theatre collection of the Reiß-Museum in Mannheim, to whom I have turned many times over the past twenty years, and to whom I owe permission to publish the Egmont manuscript in Chapter 2. A number of others deserve mention: the library staff of my home university, the University of Waterloo, especially the interlibrary loan personnel, Helena Calogeridis of the German section and Michelle Sawchuk of Fine Arts; Chris Hughes and Dorit Sachs of Central Photographic; the superb Württembergische Landesbibliothek, Stuttgart, my home base for a productive sabbatical year; Katharine A. Lochnan of the Art Gallery of Ontario, Maija Vilcins of the National Gallery of Canada, Antony V. Griffiths of The British Museum Department of Prints and Drawings, Stefaan Hautekeete of the Musées Royaux des Beaux-Arts de Belgique, J.F.Heijbroek of the Rijksmuseum Amsterdam and personnel of the Koninklijk Museum voor Schone Kunsten Antwerp; the archivists of the Sammlung Oskar Fambach at the University of Bonn; Ulrike Müller-Harang, Goethe-Nationalmuseum Weimar, and the staff of the Anna-Amalia-Bibliothek; further, Michael Assmann, Anhaltisches Theater Dessau;
Acknowledgments

Rita Czapka and "special agent" Monika Bartl, Wiener Burgtheater; Ilke Dietrich, Schauspielhaus Leipzig; Irma Dohn, Schauspiel Bonn; Daniela Gmachl, Elisabethbühne Salzburg; Rudolf Gretsher, Bayerisches Staatsschauspiel, Munich; Ann Kersting, Brigitte Klein and Bernd Wirth, Stadt- und Universitätsbibliothek Frankfurt am Main; Irmgard Mickisch, Hans-Otto-Theater Potsdam; Brigitte Neiner, Stadttheater Bern; Peter Nič and Haris Balic, Theatersammlung der Österreichischen Nationalbibliothek in Vienna; Mr Prinz and M. Rühl, Schauspielhaus Frankfurt; Ulrich Ried, Staatstheater Karlsruhe; Hans Rössler, Brandenburger Theater; Claudia Romeder, Wiener Burgtheater; Hans Rübesame, Deutsches Theater, Berlin; Karin Scheider, Nationaltheater, Weimar; M. Schultheiss, Schauspielhaus, Zürich; Ursula Zangerle, Dumont-Lindemann-Archiv in Düsseldorf; and Volkmar Hansen and Regine Zeller, Goethe-Museum in Düsseldorf.

The contribution of some personal friends also deserves acknowledgment, among them John Hobday for his interest in and respect for my work, and for joining with Gisela Stock to engineer the acquisition of a dtv Weimarer Ausgabe long after it had gone out of print, a kindness that saved me immense effort and left me with a research resource for a lifetime. I also wish to thank Peter Luft, who worked on the manuscript in chapter 2, Dagmar Jangl, who assisted in the final stages of production, and finally, for much animated stimulation, the students of my graduate course on Goethe in the winter of 1994, particularly Gabriele Franke, who contributed to the material on stage productions in chapter 9, and Linda Schmoll, whose own dissertation research has drawn me to the magic of the silver screen.

I gratefully acknowledge the following for permission to publish the illustrations:

Figures 4 and 14: Württembergische Landesbibliothek, Stuttgart.
Figure 17: Deutsches Theatermuseum. München.
Figure 35: Fürstlich Waldecksche Hauptverwaltung, Bad Arolsen.
Figure 36: By courtesy of the National Portrait Gallery, London.
Figure 38: Insel Verlag, Frankfurt am Main and Leipzig.
Figure 41: Mara Eggert. Frankfurt am Main.