Acknowledgments

This collection had its origins in the zeitgeist surrounding the 1994 centenary of Harold Innis’s birth. In a collective effort to reflect on the meaning and relevance of Innis’s work, various meetings celebrating and examining his legacy took place across Canada. These included a conference that we organized – which focused on Innis as a public intellectual – held at Concordia University in Montreal in November of that year. The sharing of knowledge by participants, chairs, respondents, hosts, and audience members who took part in the symposium made the present volume possible. We also would like to thank the other organizers of “Innis events” as well as Daniel Drache, John Browne, Luc Giroux, Gail Valaskakis, Brian Lewis, Karen Robert, Margaret MacPherson, and the members of a special graduate class on Innis taught by William Buxton at Simon Fraser University during the spring term of 1994.

Funding for our initiative was generously provided by the Joint Doctoral Program in Communication (Concordia University, Université du Québec à Montréal, Université de Montréal), the Department of Communication Studies and the Faculty of Arts and Science (both of Concordia University), Innis College (University of Toronto), the Social Science and Humanities Research Council of Canada, and the Humanities and Social Sciences Federation of Canada.

In preparing this collection for publication we have been assisted immeasurably by the skilful guidance of Philip Cercone, Joan McGilvray, and Susanne McAdam of McGill-Queen’s University Press, by John Parry’s exacting copy-editing, and by the perceptive comments of two anonymous reviewers. Kim Sawada did an expert job compiling the index, for which we thank her. Finally, it was largely through Robert DeLeski's unstinting efforts that the original material metamorphosed into an integrated text.

Each of us has specific debts of gratitude. Charles Acland is thankful for the years of support and encouragement afforded by the Faculty of General Studies at the University of Calgary. William Buxton wishes to express his heartfelt gratitude to Manon Niquette, whose enthusiasm for life and passion for ideas – which included even joy in the discovery of Innis’s thought – helped sustain him throughout the project. Charles Acland wishes to acknowledge the limitless support and encouragement from Rae Staseson, whose creative and intellectual energy is a daily source of inspiration.

Finally, four wonderful children have joined the respective lives of the editors while the volume was in preparation. They are a son and a daughter, Jesse Lee and Océane Niquette-Buxton, and two nieces, Emma and Bianca Acland. Although Innis's intellect was occasionally profoundly pessimistic, we offer these critiques and assessments of his work and thought in the hope that a spark of optimism might be kindled in them and those of their generation – the true inheritors of the next century.
