Acknowledgments

I am grateful to the British Academy, the Leverhulme Trust and the Carnegie Trust for supplying research grants for this project, and to the Institute of Irish Studies at Queen’s University, Belfast for the award of a one-year visiting Fellowship. Over the years, many of the ideas in this book have been aired to various helpful audiences: the Irish-Australian Conference in Perth, the Hertford College Oxford Research Seminar, the Ulster Committee of Historical Sciences and the Institute of Irish Studies Seminars at Queen’s. I am also indebted to the University of Stirling’s sabbatical leave scheme.

The staff of the many libraries I have worked in have all been extremely professional and efficient. Particular mention should be made of the late Peter Young and his successor Victor Laing at the Irish Military Archives, and Seamus Helferty in UCD Archives. Sister Raphael of the Catholic Archives in Perth, Western Australia and Patricia McCarthy of the Cork City Archives went far beyond the call of duty in helping me.

The friendship and hospitality of Tim Pat Coogan, Diarmuid O’Connor and Rodney and Susan Thom made my stays in Dublin most enjoyable and productive. Michael MacEvilly has been a constant source of assistance and encouragement along with other Irish historians who have never been less than generous. Michael MacEvilly, Seán O’Mahony, Eamonn Gaynor and Meda Ryan have supplied valuable comments on the chapters on local areas. Michael MacEvilly, Tim Pat Coogan, Diarmuid O’Connor, Jim Fleming, Liam Cosgrave and Eunan O’Halpin have kindly supplied private documents to me.

In Australia, Bob and Lesley Reece, my wonderful friends, and John Corr and Ian Chambers, my first and most supportive students, are among many there who made my time so pleasurable. At Stirling University, my research student Robert Lynch has offered a willing ear and sound advice. Fergal Tobin originally suggested this book and is the most genial and sympathetic of editors. Deirdre Rennison Kunz has seen the book to press in the most sympathetic and tactful of manners.
