

CONTRIBUTORS

Caroline Donati is a journalist and independent consultant specializing in the Middle East. A graduate of the Institut d'études politiques de Paris, she was Beirut correspondent for La Croix (1996–2000) and is the author of L'Exception syrienne: entre modernisation et résistance (La Découverte 2009). She writes for the online journal Mediapart (www.mediapart.fr).

Teije Hidde Donker is a PhD candidate at the European University Institute, department of political and social sciences, Florence, Italy. His research focuses on Islamist movements in the Arab world, with particular attention to the interaction between regimes and social movements in Syria and Tunisia.

Anoushiravan Ehteshami is professor of International Relations in the School of Government and International Affairs, University of Durham. His books include Reform in the Middle East Oil Monarchies (coeditor, Ithaca Press 2008); Globalization and Geopolitics in the Middle East: Old Games, New Rules (Routledge 2007); Iran and the Rise of Its Neoconservatives (coauthor, I. B. Tauris 2007); Iran's Security Policy in the Post-Revolutionary Era (coauthor, RAND 2001); Syria and Iran: Middle Powers in a Penetrated Regional System (coauthor, Routledge 1997); and After Khomeini: The Iranian Second Republic (Routledge, 1995).

Kevan Harris recently received a PhD in sociology at The Johns Hopkins University, where he completed a dissertation on the politics of social policy in postrevolutionary Iran. His research focuses on comparative and historical sociology of state and class formation in the Islamic Republic. He has written on labor unrest and the political economy of privatization in Iran, as well as an ethnographic study of the 2009 Green Movement. He conducted fieldwork in Iran on an International Dissertation Research Fellowship from the Social Science Research Council and was a U.S. Institute of Peace Jennings Randolph Peace Scholar. He is currently a research fellow in the Department of Near Eastern Studies at Princeton University.

viii CONTRIBUTORS

Steven Heydemann serves as senior adviser for Middle East Initiatives at the U.S. Institute of Peace. From 2003 to 2007, Heydemann directed the Center for Democracy and Civil Society at Georgetown University. His books and articles include Authoritarianism in Syria: Institutions and Social Conflict, 1946–1970 (Cornell University Press 1999); War, Institutions and Social Change in the Middle East (edited, University of California Press 2000); Networks of Privilege in the Middle East: The Politics of Economic Reform Reconsidered (edited, Palgrave Macmillan 2004); “Upgrading Authoritarianism in the Arab World” (2007); “Social Pacts and the Persistence of Authoritarianism in the Middle East” (2007); and “Authoritarian Learning and Authoritarian Resilience: Regime Responses to the ‘Arab Awakening’” (with Reinoud Leenders, 2011).

Raymond Hinnebusch is professor of International Relations and Middle East Politics and director of the Centre for Syrian Studies at the University of St. Andrews. He is author of books and articles on the international politics of the Middle East and of studies on Syria and Egypt. His books include Syria: Revolution from Above (Routledge 2001); Syria and the Middle East Peace Process (coauthor, Council on Foreign Relations Press 1991); and Authoritarian Power and State Formation in Ba’thist Syria: Army, Party and Peasant (Westview Press 1990).

Heidi Huuhtanen holds a PhD in political science from the University of Durham. Her research has focused on the impact of war preparation on authoritarianism in Syria and the general nexus between security and governance. She currently guides conflict prevention and resolution related activities of the Crisis Management Initiative in the Middle East.

Reinoud Leenders is reader in international relations with a focus on Middle East Studies in the Department of War Studies at King’s College, London. He formerly worked as Middle East analyst for the International Crisis Group based in Beirut (2002–2005). His research interests include Middle East politics generally and Syria, Lebanon, and Iraq in particular and focus on authoritarian governance, corruption, armed conflict, and refugee issues. He authored several articles in academic journals and edited volumes and Spoils of Truce: Corruption and Institution-Building in Post-War Lebanon (Cornell University Press 2012). His current research focuses on mobilization and the popular uprising in Syria.

Arzoo Osanloo is associate professor at the University of Washington in the Law, Societies, and Justice Program. Formerly an immigration and asylum/refugee attorney, Osanloo conducts research and teaches on the intersection of law and culture, including human rights, refugee rights and identity, and women's rights in Muslim societies. She has published in various academic journals. Her book The Politics of Women's Rights in Iran (Princeton 2009) analyzes the politicization of "rights talk" in postrevolutionary Iran. Her current project considers the Islamic mandate of forgiveness, compassion, and mercy in Iran's criminal sanctioning system; jurisprudential scholarship; and everyday acts among pious Muslims.

Thomas Pierret is a lecturer on contemporary Islam at the University of Edinburgh. He was a postdoctoral research associate at Princeton University, Department of Near Eastern Studies. In addition to articles in academic journals, he is the author of Baas et islam en Syrie: La dynastie Asad face aux oulémas (Presses universitaires de France 2011).

Paola Raunio is a PhD candidate in the School of International Relations at the University of St. Andrews. Her research title is "Saving Muslim Women in the Era of 'Axis of Evil'? Universal versus Local Understanding of Women's Rights in Iran." She graduated from the School of African and Oriental Studies, London University, in 2008.

Güneş Murat Tezcür is associate professor of political science at Loyola University, Chicago. He has published extensively on democratization, political violence, Muslim political attitudes, judicial activism, ethnic conflict, and electoral politics. He is also the author of Muslim Reformers in Iran and Turkey: The Paradox of Moderation (University of Texas Press 2010). His current project examines the conditions under which ordinary people take extraordinary risks and join insurgent movements.

Maaïke Warnaar is a PhD candidate at the University of St Andrews and teaches international relations of the Middle East at the University of Amsterdam. Her doctoral research is on ideology and Iranian foreign policy under President Ahmadinejad.

Max Weiss is assistant professor of history and Near Eastern Studies at Princeton University. He is the author of In the Shadow of Sectarianism: Law, Shi'ism and the Making of Modern Lebanon (Harvard University Press, 2010) and the translator, most recently, of Hassouna Mosbahi, A Tunisian Tale (American University in Cairo Press, 2011), and Samar Yazbek, A Woman in the Crossfire: Diaries of the Syrian Revolution (London: Haus, 2012).

Tina Zintl is a PhD candidate at University of St Andrews (research project on "Syria's Modernization from Above: A Success-Story Unfolding Due to the Political Inclusion of Foreign-Educated Returnees and Expatriates under Bashar al-Asad?"). She holds a master's degree in political science, economics, and geography from University of Erlangen-Nuremberg.

