

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

THIS PROJECT HAS TWO BIRTHS. Its empathy for the unrespectable is a penchant of my own—arguably bred into me but unwittingly nurtured by women in my family. Women determined and sharp enough to not simply get by, but also to push past obstacles and effectively get over. Its subject matter, however, came from my interaction with a group of students in Muncy, Pennsylvania. Just as I am grateful to the women in my immediate family, I find myself also indebted to the women at SCI-Muncy for teaching me more than I ever taught them.

The History Department at the University of Pennsylvania profoundly tested and honed my resolve. My committee, Mary Frances Berry, Kathleen M. Brown, and Farah Jasmine Griffin, provided invaluable training and guidance throughout the dissertation process. I also thank the many scholars, peers, and friends who enhanced my education: Luther Adams, Jackie Akins, Giselle Anatol, Elijah Anderson, Erica Armstrong, Jessica Davis-Ba, Ed Baptist, Herman Beavers, Deborah Broadnax, Stephanie Camp, Drew Faust, Rhonda Frederick, Leticia Hernandez, Ross Johnson, Tanaquil Jones, Robin Leidner, Marie Manrique, Murray Murphy, Leslie Patrick, James Peterson, Kirby Randolph, John Roberts, Nichole Rustin, Barbara Savage, Thomas Sugrue, Hayley Thomas, Rhonda Williams, and Rafael Zapata.

The Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission supported my research with grants in 1997 and in 2001. It is not an exaggeration to say that without these grants and the assistance of the Commission's archivists, this project could never have been completed. A special thanks to Judy Duritsa, Ruth Hodge, Anne Marie Ickes, Karen James, Linda Ries, Michael Sherbon, Linda Shopes, Jonathan Stayer, and Robert Weible. I would also like to thank Natalie Caldwell and Ward Childs at the Philadelphia City Archive—their expert assistance helped me locate many of the proverbial needles in this haystack. Richard Boardman and Paul Savedow of the Free Library of Philadelphia came through for me at the eleventh hour with images, maps, and permissions, as did Brett Bertollino of the Eastern State Penitentiary Historic Site—thank you.

Between 1998 and 2000, my work benefited from the Consortium for A Strong Minority Presence Doctoral and Postdoctoral Fellowship at Occidental College. I thank Cecilia Fox for reading this manuscript in its early stages. Betsy Perry, a friend and colleague, graciously read draft after draft of this book long after I left Oxy. I remain indebted to her for her time and thoughtful comments. Arthé Anthony, Regina Freer, P. Gabrielle Foreman, Donna Maeda, and Movindri Reddy—all provided guidance and wonderful sisterhood during my time in Los Angeles. They reminded me of the importance of activist teaching and scholarship.

As a postdoctoral fellow at the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture in 2000, I was fortunate enough to work with a remarkable group of scholars. In addition to the Center's rich collections, fellowship seminars expanded my thinking, enhanced my writing, and sharpened my skills as a historian. Many thanks to Kim D. Butler, Jacqueline Goldsby, Cecilia Green, Robin D. G. Kelley, and Genna Rae McNeil. I also thank Aisha al-Adawiya and Diana Lachatanere. I owe a special thanks to Colin Palmer for his stewardship of the program, his astute comments on earlier drafts, and his support. His mentorship was invaluable—indeed, almost as good as his cooking.

The Ford Foundation Minority Postdoctoral Fellowship allowed me to fill in crucial research gaps, and my time in the Program in African American Studies at Princeton University in 2001 extended my opportunity to work with Colin Palmer. Nell Painter graciously read early chapters and offered encouragement and key insights. In 2003, I spent a wonderful summer concluding my research at the Library Company of Philadelphia and the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Resources in the Library Company especially helped me complete chapter 1—thank you Jenny Ambrose, Linda August, Cornelia King, Phillip Lapsansky, Cathy Matson, Charlene Peacock, Erika Piola, Nicole Scalessa, Sarah Weatherwax, and Wendy Woloson.

Raphael Allen understood my vision and placed a great deal of confidence in my abilities, and I am truly grateful. Valerie Millholland, Miriam Angress, and Mark Mastromarino at Duke brought the project to fruition—thank you. C. Dallett Hemphill read several sections of this manuscript. Her input and time are greatly appreciated. Nikki Childers also read, critiqued, and copy-edited drafts of this work—thanks a bunch little sister. Many thanks to Stephanie Camp and Rhonda Frederick for reading sections of my work even as they were both in the final stages of submitting their own manuscripts to publishers. Over the years Roger Lane has been a historical godfather of sorts—lending his microfilm reader and personal copy of the William Dorsey Collection and, more recently, the benefit of his vast expertise. Thanks for reading the manuscript and for your keen observations; most of all, thanks for your off-the-chain sense of humor—clearly, great minds really do think alike.

My colleagues in History and Politics at Drexel University also helped bring this project to completion. I thank Donald Stevens for his suggestions on the book and Richardson Dilworth for sharing his insights on key sections. A special thanks to Sharon Grinnage, Christian Hunold, Julie Mostov, David Munns (my future ex-husband), Joel Oestreich, Erik Rau, Amy Slaton, Kathryn Steen, and Gina Waters. Gabriella Ibieta and Abioseh Porter—thanks for your guidance and for lending an ear. I also thank Donna Murasko, the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, for her unwavering support of Africana Studies at Drexel University.

Cheryl D. Hicks spent months reading my work, and her studied review greatly improved the book. The benefit of her analysis is rivaled only by the richness of the friendship, sisterhood, and laughter that she shares. I am eternally grateful for the support, warmth, love, friendship, wine excursions, and meals with a host of family and friends, but especially: Stephanie Camp, Nicole Childers, Kneia DaCosta, Rhonda Frederick, Dianne Glave, Ross, Alison, and the entire Johnson family, Nzadi and Maghan Keita, Anisa and Kristine Lewis, Gwendolyn and Waviney Lyken, Inez and Dolores Ramos and the Ramos family, Charles and Tonya Rice, Maggie Ussery, Melissa Walters, Constance Wright, Maisha Yearwood and her family, and, my karmic-debt paramour, Irvin Martes. Sylvia Neal, my grandmother, encouraged me to complete this book and showed me how never to back down. Judith Lovell, my aunt, taught me that with will, you can get through a solid brick wall. Londa, Neal, Joselyn, the Lovells, and Craig continue to remind me of who I am and where I came from. Thanks.

June Maria Gross, my mother, continues to give me everything, including a model of perseverance, an iron core, and an unwavering commitment to education. You set me on this path long ago and believed in me when nobody else did. I love you and dedicate this book to you.
