Acknowledgments

This collection began as a special issue of the social science journal Italian American Review, and I would like to thank those at Queens College’s John D. Calandra Italian American Institute who helped make that publication a reality at the time: the late Philip Cannistraro, Francisca Viera, Carmine Pizzirusso, David Aliano, and Rosaria Musco.

This current publication would not have been possible without the energizing leadership of the current director of the Calandra Institute, Dean Anthony Julian Tamburri, who has created the ideal conditions of academic rigor, collegiality, and intellectual freedom that helped bring this book to print. Rosangela Briscese, the Institute’s coordinator of Academic and Cultural Programs, has provided invaluable support.

I am indebted to a community of artists and scholars working in folklore and Italian American studies who are contributing to an innovative, intellectually engaging, and gracious approach to documenting history and expressive culture. In this regard, I thank the contributors to this publication, as well as Stefano Albertini, B. Amore, Giorgio Bertellini, Nancy Carnevale, Clarissa Clò, Paul D’Ambrosio, George De Stefano, Giovanna Del Negro, Teresa Fiore, Donna Gabaccia, Fred Gardaphé, John Gennari, Edvige Giunta, Jennifer Guglielmo, Joanna Clapps Herman, Annie Lanzillotto, Gina Miele, Rosina Miller, Jason Pine, Goffredo Plastino, Leonard Norman Primiano, Stephanie Romeo, Laura Ruberto, and Robert Viscusi.

I would be remiss not to acknowledge, if only anonymously, those Italian Americans who routinely undermine a healthy exchange of ideas and a general climate of amity. Their provincial dispositions and obstinate reactions are cautionary examples of how not to operate in the ambit of Italian Americana.

Thanks to Robert Oppedisano, the former director of Fordham University Press, who proclaimed spontaneously at a gathering of colleagues, “What we need is a book on Italian-American folklore” and then shepherded this book in its early stages. I’m grateful to the Press’s new director, Fredric Nachbaur, and his assistant, Mary-Lou Peña, as well as managing editor Eric Newman and copy editor Teresa Artman for their help in making this book a reality. I offer a special thanks to the two anonymous reviewers whose close readings of the essays made this book a better one.

And finally I thank Zulma, Akela, and Lucca, with whom I lovingly share my everyday life.
