Acknowledgments

A scholar's life is like a journey, one that entails challenges, surprises, and rewards. The journey is impossible—and incomplete—without guides, companions, and hospitalities, with which I am abundantly blessed, and for which this is but a meager tribute.

This book grew out of the dissertation that I finished in 1998 at Washington University, St. Louis. In my studies I have been wrestling with some recurring patterns; the writing of this dissertation has brought them into focus. To Professor Robert E. Hegel, my mentor, I owe more than words can adequately convey. His scholarship and humaneness I can only hope to emulate. His many questions have lent direction to my research. It is my good fortune to be under his guidance. I am grateful to Professors Beata Grant and Robert K. Weninger, who also directed the research and writing of the dissertation, and to Professors Joseph R. Allen, David Hadas, Erin S. Mackie, and the late William H. Matheson, who were involved with it in its various incarnations. I am greatly indebted to Professors Martin W. Huang and David L. Rolston for their invaluable guidance and support. I am endlessly grateful to my colleague, Professor John B. Henderson, who read the manuscript and offered many insightful suggestions and criticisms. I have benefited much from the editorial help of Ilene Cohen. Needless to say, I alone am responsible for any errors and inaccuracies that remain. I am particularly grateful to two anonymous readers for the University of Hawai'i Press for their careful perusal and appraisal of the manuscript; their criticisms and comments have clarified my thinking on many issues and have saved me from many pitfalls. I am deeply grateful to Pamela Kelley for her enthusiasm, professionalism, and expert help; working with her has been a blessing. I am grateful to Jenn Harada and Cheri Dunn for their involvement in bringing the book to print and for their timely help. I am indebted to Susan Biggs Corrado for her editorial expertise—her copyediting has made the final stage a pleasure. Finally, I thank my wife, Lan, for her loving support and understanding, and our son, Samuel, for the joy, wonder, and change he has brought to our lives.
