Acknowledgments

This work would not have been possible without the help of a great number of individuals. I owe my deepest gratitude to the monks and laypeople who extended such gracious hospitality, were so generous with their time, and shared their knowledge, stories, and opinions. It is to them that I dedicate this book even though, to protect their anonymity, they remain nameless. My heartfelt gratitude goes to Palden Tsering, Sonam Tsering, and their families and friends for their help, warmth, and kindness; to Tendzin Tsering, who sadly passed away in February 2011; to Lhangtsang Soldor, Jamphel Sems, Sönam Dorjé, Dowi Namlha, Kelzang, Tseringsham, and others who worked with me in the field but wish to remain anonymous; to my teacher and friend Trashi Drölma; to Sangguo for her unstinting kindness; and to Lhündrup Dorjé and Akhu for their friendship and forbearance in the face of my never-ending stream of questions.

Research and writing would not have been possible without the backing of various institutions: the Leverhulme Trust, the British Inter-University China Centre, the White Rose East Asia Centre, the University of Manchester, the University of Leeds, Beijing Central Nationalities University, and Qinghai Nationalities University. The financial support of the Leverhulme Trust, the UK’s Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) and Arts and Humanities Research Council (AHRC), and the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) is gratefully acknowledged. I would like to thank my teachers, colleagues, and friends at the universities of Leeds and Manchester who provided such a supportive environment and helped me in numerous ways over the years. Special thanks go to Flemming Christiansen, Tim Wright, and Victor T. King for their advice, guidance, and encouragement.

I am also grateful to the many other scholars who have offered help and guidance at various stages of the path toward this study in its final form. I owe an enormous debt to Lama Jabb for his help in checking my translations from the Tibetan, his encouragement, and our many thought-provoking discussions and to Nicolas Sihlé, who has been both a mentor and friend. I would also like to thank Hildegard Diemberger, Alison Hardie, Anthony Fielding,
Charlene Makley, Caroline Fielder, Isabelle Henrion-Dourcy, Kate Crosby, Martin Seeger, Cathy Cantwell, Peter Harvey, Soyeun Kim, and Paul Richardson for commenting on aspects of my work; Tsering Thar for his support and help; Ulrich Pagel, Tadeusz Skorupski, Robert Barnett, and Judith Nordby for their early interest and encouragement; Andrew Fischer, Gray Tuttle, Yangdon Dhondup, and Jonathan Mair, who generously shared their work; Dan Li for her Chinese proofreading; Pierre Fuller, Ioannis Gaitanidis, Gabor Gergely, Lewis Husain, and Stuart Wright for their guidance and moral support; and last but not least, Elisa Cencetti, my soul mate in the field.

At the University of Hawai‘i Press, I would like to thank my editors Stephanie Chun and Mark Rowe for their enthusiasm at the outset and their patience with the unexpected delays in the manuscript’s progression to publication, as well as freelancer Rosemary Wetherold for her meticulous copyediting. The book has benefitted enormously from the comments of two reviewers, one of whom was particularly generous in offering such extensive, detailed, and thoughtful suggestions. All remaining shortcomings are my own.

Finally, I would like to thank my closest friends and family in the UK: Jonty Tenniswood for being there during the endgame; Rachel Julian and “the gang,” Edward Pepper, Andrea Thompson, Tom and Gill Caple, and Eirian and Rob Cass for their constant love and support throughout; and, most of all, my mother, Connie Morgan, who has supported this endeavor in ways far too numerous to count.