ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is pleasant to recall the associations with the friends and scholars who aided in the telling of Omai's story. Kenneth Emory, of the Bishop Museum in Honolulu, helped in making clear the significance of Omai's training and background. Professors C. B. Tinker and H. N. Fairchild, by their readable studies, introduced me to the vogue of the Noble Savage of which Omai became such a distinguished part. Mary Dillingham Frear and Ruby Speliakos Clark helped reveal many entertaining sidelights on the native's stay in London by reading in the magazines of the day. Dr. Fulmer Mood and Dr. Richmond Beatty read the story and gave constructive suggestions as to organization. Much is owed to the British Museum and particularly to the Huntington Library, whose helpful and friendly staff make the days spent there both pleasant and fruitful.
