Acknowledgments

FIRST AND FOREMOST, my gratitude belongs to Stephen F. Teiser. He was, and still is, a model mentor. Many thanks also to Jacqueline I. Stone, who despite being devoted to her research somehow always makes time for everyone else. I am a better person and scholar for having the opportunity to work closely with both of them.

The Religion Department at Princeton was a wonderful place to study. The amount of support and genuine interest in others’ work made it a special and unique place. I would especially like to thank John Gager, Jonathan Gold, Eric Gregory, Martha Himmelfarb, Susan Naquin, and Jeffery Stout. At Berkeley, I was fortunate to work with Robert Sharf, Patricia Berger, Michael Nylan, Paula Varsano, and Alexander von Rospatt. At UCLA, I had the pleasure to learn from Robert Buswell, Lothar von Falkenhausen, Richard von Glahn, David Schaberg, and Jonathan Silk.

Several colleagues read and commented on drafts at various stages. Many thanks to 貝劍銘, 柏崗, 何祿凱, Jonathan Klawans, Buzzy Teiser, Stuart Young, and Zuo Ya for their comments and critiques. Both 柏崗 and 何祿凱 generously read multiple drafts of the introduction. Stuart was incredibly supportive—reading and offering feedback on every single chapter. I also had the opportunity to present portions of the book and receive feedback at UCLA, Hong Kong University of Science and Technology, Harvard University, and Yale University. Parts of the introduction and chapter 1 were published in the Journal of Chinese Religions 45, no. 1 (2017): 1–18; these have been revised for the present work.

I want to express my gratitude to the two anonymous readers. They were both careful and attentive, and they saved me from making many errors. I would also like to thank Stephanie Chun, who has guided the project with care and consideration, as well as Cheryl Loe and the rest of the editorial staff at the University of Hawai‘i Press. Michelle C. Wang was incredibly helpful with her advice about cover images.
Princeton University Graduate School provided me with a five-year funding package that allowed me to fully focus on my research. Funding from Princeton’s East Asian Studies Program and the Princeton Institute for International and Regional Studies allowed me to study Japanese in Yokohama, as well as travel to archives in Europe and to cave-temples in China. Princeton’s Center for the Study of Religion provided me with funding and mentorship. The Chung-Hwa Institute of Buddhist Studies (CHIBS) Fellowship for Graduate Students generously funded my research in China. I also benefited from a Mellon/ACLS Dissertation Completion Fellowship.

My research stay in 2011 at the Dunhuang Academy was generously funded by the Abel and Sophia Sheng Charitable Foundation and was facilitated by the Dunhuang Foundation. Directors Fan Jinshi, Wang Xudong, and Zhao Shengliang made me feel very welcome and helped me secure access to many sites. Fan Quan, Li Hong, Liu Cuiying, Liu Qin, Song Shuxia, and Wang Li were all wonderful supports and friends. I would like to thank Nathalie Monnet for her help viewing Pelliot manuscripts at the Bibliothèque nationale de France. Susan Whitfield and Alastair Morrison helped me examine Stein manuscripts at the British Library.

My book research and writing was well-supported at Boston University. I was awarded an East Asia Career Development Professorship whose research funds enabled me to complete the book. The BU Center for Humanities provided me with a full semester of research leave along with a junior leave from the university so that I was able to devote a full year to completing the manuscript. The BU Center for Humanities also generously funded a book subvention. At both Gonzaga University and at BU, I am grateful to have had supportive colleagues and friends. I would like to thank my BU colleagues in the Department of Religion as well as in Asian Studies. I am especially thankful to the BU Religion writing group and our biannual writing retreats. The retreats and the comradery they foster helped to keep my writing on track.

The National Center for Faculty Development and Diversity’s Faculty Success Program and my small group were, and still are, an amazing source of support. Michelle Boyd and her Inkwell writing retreats were incredibly helpful. Dalena Storm was an efficient and excellent editor with whom I worked with during the early stages of the book writing.

My love and gratitude to all of my family and friends throughout this writing process. I am fortunate to have too many to name here, especially my many wonderful senpai and kōhai, so I will limit myself. 何祿凱—I would have never completed this book without your support and encouragement.
Acknowledgments

Many thanks also to Valeria Escauriaza-López Fadul, Jennifer Glass, Sarit Kattan Gribetz, Anita Henningsgaard, Michelle Henningsgaard, Andrew Hughes, Linda Hughes, Mochi Hughes, Tonkastu Hughes, Dale Levine, Cooper Selco, Jake Selco, Stacey Selco, and William Vega.