Acknowledgments

We are pleased to acknowledge the help of many parties. The Fulbright New Century Scholars Program brought us together in 2003 to discuss ethnic, sectarian, and cultural conflict under the chairmanship of Professor Edward Tiryakian of Duke University, and supported our individual fieldwork and survey research. We are most grateful to the staff of Fulbright, especially Micaela Iovine and Patti Peterson, to Ed, and to the other NCS Program participants for enlightening conversations on many of the topics included in this volume, to the United States Institute of Peace, which hosted a discussion of the results of our research, and to the public for their comments. In drawing together the materials, we were aided by the staffs of the University Center for International Studies and the Department of Anthropology at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and the librarians of UNC-Chapel Hill and Duke University. The National Humanities Center, directed by Geoffrey Harpham and Kent Mullikan, provided an opportunity for writing and revision.

Vivian and Marion Berghahn were supportive from the moment we first discussed the project with them. Charles Tilly read the entire manuscript and provided extensive, helpful comments. Ruth Homrighaus's timely, reliable copyediting rescued us when the manuscript was first submitted. Adam Brill transformed the mathematical diagrams into publishable illustrations quickly and painstakingly. Melissa Spinelli and Michael Dempsey planned and managed the production process. Shawn Kendrick copyedited and typeset the entire book after revisions were complete, lending consistency to our use of English and clarity to our arguments. Elizabeth Martin drafted the index. Any errors that remain are, of course, our own.

Finally, we thank Belinda, Florence, and Thomas for their unstinting support and appreciation.
