Acknowledgements

My interest in metaphors started with literary representations of the female body by nineteenth-century North American women writers. Located at the Obama Institute of Transnational American Studies at Johannes Gutenberg University Mainz, Germany, and in collaboration with the research programme ‘Life Sciences – Life Writing’, the project developed under the energetic and inspiring guidance of Mita Banerjee and Alfred Hornung into a research project supported by the German Research Foundation (grant no. WO 2139/2-1). I will always be profoundly grateful for the support I have received from colleagues in Mainz, including among many others my PhD supervisor Oliver Scheiding.

When I was invited to join the research project ‘Uses of Literature: The Social Dimensions of Literature’ at the University of Southern Denmark in 2017 (grant no. DNRF127), a new phase began in every point of view. I found a generous, warm-hearted and intellectually stimulating home, and my research project on metaphors took a decisive turn: the varied uses of literature that we studied under the guidance of Niels Bohr Professor Rita Felski profoundly influenced my approach to metaphors. I am eternally grateful to Rita Felski, Anne-Marie Mai and Peter Simonsen for their trust and kindness, their continuously productive feedback, and their support and guidance every step of the way.

Each chapter specifies the individuals to whom I owe particular thanks. In addition, my profound gratitude goes to everyone who read excerpts of the book, commented on articles I wrote alongside, listened to early and more developed thoughts, inspired me with new ideas, challenged my often too simplistic arguments – and to everyone who was there to cheer me up when writing was tedious and, too often, felt overwhelming: Alan Bleakley, Alastair Morrison, Anders Juhl Langscheidel Rasmussen, Arthur Frank, Bryan Yazell, Christina Gerlach, Christine Marks, Cindie Aaen Maagard, Daniel Teufel, Danielle Spencer, Elin Abrahamsson, Ella Fegitz, Emily Hogg, Johanne
Acknowledgements

Gormsen Schmidt, Klaus Petersen, Maura Spiegel, Marie-Elizabeth Lei Holm, Miriam Halstein, Moritz Schramm, Patrick Fessenbecker, Pernille Hasselsteen, Sophy Kohler and Susanne Michl. (My apologies to everyone who should be part of this list and isn’t.)

At Edinburgh University Press, I want to thank Michelle Houston, Susannah Butler and Fiona Conn as well as series editor Gavin Miller and copyeditor Robert Anderson for their consistent support and the incredibly encouraging spirit along the way.

Anna Fenton-Hathaway’s extraordinary skills at copyediting provided not only the most generous and warm-hearted moral boost along the way, but our collaboration is also the reason why this book is, despite its focus on theory and detailed close readings, relatively readable. Anna, I cannot thank you enough.

I am also very grateful to Horacio Salinas who kindly provided one of his stunning photographs for the cover image of this book.

Lastly, what would I do without you, friends and family, in my old and new home? You know who you are.