Acknowledgments

This book has been written in many places and with the encouragement and advice of many colleagues, friends, and sometimes strangers. I was supported by several institutions, among them my alma mater, Goethe University Frankfurt, which funded very early and hence very crucial research for this project, and the Alexander von Humboldt-Foundation, which made it possible for me to pursue a two-year post-doctoral fellowship at the University of California at Irvine. I want to thank the colleagues at the annual conferences of the Association for the Study of Law, Culture, and the Humanities, where I presented my work over the years. Special thanks go to Peter Schneck at the University of Osnabrück for his support and to Frank Kelleter and the John F. Kennedy Institute at Freie Universität Berlin, where I finished central parts of the manuscript.

Scholars whose encouragement, kindness, and knowledge supported me and my project in innumerable ways include Benjamin Betka, Birte Christ, Christian Kloeckner, Zuzanna Ładyga, and Katja Sarkowsky. Christa Buschendorf’s guidance has been invaluable, and I can only hope that, in the future, I will have the opportunity to pass on what I have learned from her to other young researchers. Special thanks go to Brook Thomas, whose generous advice and foundational work on corporations in law and literature have helped this project to become reality. After all the travel, research, and exciting conversations with scholars, I have also had the fortune to have friends and family to come home to. I want to thank Mama, Sascha, Sarah, and Sonja for patience, laughter, and for all the cake. Finally, closest to my heart, this book is for Peter and for Linus, who took his first steps as I was completing this book.
