Acknowledgments

Writing this book during an administrative gig, four years of political tumult, and a global pandemic gave much-needed creative purpose and pleasurable intellectual focus to my days, even when writing was difficult, which of course it often is. I could not have completed it without the sustained help and support of family, friends, and colleagues near and far.

For generous and generative feedback on chapter drafts at various stages (including earlier and related article incarnations) I am incredibly grateful to Joseph Bristow, Kimberly Cox, Carolyn Dever, Dennis Denisoff, Gail Hamner, Nathan K. Hensley, Martha Stoddard Holmes, Linda K. Hughes, Randy Johnson, Beth Newman, Sarah Parker, Marion Thain, Ana Parejo Vadillo, Heather Bozant Witcher, and the reviewers at Edinburgh University Press. For brilliant answers to often random research questions, I owe a huge debt of gratitude to Sharon Bickle, Stephen Calloway, Julie Codell, Paul Delaney, Carl Eby, Dino Felluga, Kate Flint, Dustin Friedman, Pamela Gilbert, Amy Huseby, Michael Hurley, Joshua King, Mark Samuels Lasner, Michelle Lee, Diana Maltz, Kristin Mahoney, Fiona Mann, Ruth McAdams, Alex Murray, Fred Roden, Jason Rudy, Talia Schaffer, Margaret Stetz, and Paul van Cappelleveen. And for camaraderie, support, and conversations that resulted in insights and improvements large and small, I am thankful for my fellow travelers at Appalachian State University: Joseph Bathanti, Sushmita Chatterjee, Tina Groover, Alison Gulley, Elaine O’Quinn, David Orvis, Susan Staub, and Jennifer Wilson. Writing is, indeed, a collaborative endeavor.

Michelle Houston and Susannah Butler at Edinburgh University Press.
Press get their own paragraph for their incredible patience and guidance. Thank you for believing in this book.

My work on this project has been eased by the skilled assistance of librarians Greta Browning and Breanna Crumpton at Appalachian; numerous archivists and staff at the Bodleian, the British Library, and the National Library of Scotland; Helena Ritchie at the Fitzwilliam Museum; Stephan Dahme at Klassik Stiftung Weimar, and Stefania Girometti and Bastian Eclercy at the Städel Museum, Frankfurt am Main.

For financial support for travel to archives, thanks to the Department of English, the College of Arts and Sciences, and the University Research Council at Appalachian State University. Thanks also to my graduate research assistants Hannah Chaney and Sophia Donadio.

Extracts from unpublished Michael Field papers appear with permission of The British Library, The Bodleian Library, and The National Library of Scotland, and with the very kind permission and support of the literary executors of The Michael Field Estate: Leonie Sturge-Moore and Charmian O’Neil. For permission to reproduce images I am especially grateful to the Mark Samuels Lasner Collection, University of Delaware Library, Museums and Press. Acknowledgment for images is also due to The Maas Gallery, London; The Städel Museum, Frankfurt am Main; Sala dell’Anticollegio, Palazzo Ducale, Venice; Museum Boijmans Van Beuningen, Rotterdam; National Gallery, Washington, DC; Colonna Gallery, Rome; The Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge; The Bodleian Library, Oxford; and The British Library, London.

A portion of the introduction was originally published in a section of “‘Our Brains Struck Fire Each from Each’: Disidentification, Difference, and Desire in the Collaborative Aesthetics of Michael Field” which appeared in Economies of Desire at the Victorian Fin de Siècle: Libidinal Lives (Routledge, 2016. pp.180–204). It is reprinted here with permission from Routledge. Chapter 2’s discussion of Saint Katherine reprints, with some revision, a section of “On Art Objects and Women’s Words: Ekphrasis in Vernon Lee (1887), Graham R. Tomson (1889), and Michael Field (1892)” which can be found in BRANCH: Britain, Representation, and Nineteenth-Century History under a Creative Commons license. Chapter 4 is a revised and expanded version of “‘Dragging at Memory’s Fetter’: Michael Field’s Personal Elegies, Victorian Mourning, and the Problem of Whym Chow” (The Michaelian 1, June 2009) and appears here with permission from Rivendale Press. A version of Chapter 5 was originally published as “‘Thy body maketh a solemn song’: Desire and Disability in Michael Field’s ‘Catholic Poems’” in Michael Field, Decadent Moderns (Ohio UP, 2019. pp. 188–209). It is reprinted here in a revised and expanded version with permission from Ohio University Press.

To my parents and other family members, especially Kenny, Rory, and Sheila, you are a consistent and loving source of warm support and inspiration, for which I am truly grateful. To Sam and Frodo, my feline companions, you came into my home and heart during the last third of this project and have filled my writing space with immeasurable light and joy. And finally, to Kim, my beloved partner in all things, thank you for being with me every step of the way and for reading every word. You make me a better writer, a better thinker, and a better person. You give me hope; and you help me make all things new.