Acknowledgements

The research for this project, which is based on a doctoral thesis, was made possible by the award of a Chancellor’s International Scholarship from the University of Warwick. I am grateful for the support of the Department of English and Comparative Literary Studies at the University of Warwick, and in particular Emma Francis, who supervised my research. I am also indebted to Laura Schwartz and Nadia Valman for their encouraging and structured feedback on an earlier version of this project. The earliest stages of research benefited from the involvement of Lawrence Phillips, Lorna Jowett and Janet Wilson; I also owe particular thanks to Ruth Livesey and Mary Elizabeth Leighton, whose support at a critical stage of this project was decisive in its continuation. I also wish to express my gratitude to the Society of Architectural Historians of Great Britain for their generous support. The kind assistance and perennial patience of librarians at Senate House Library, the Bodleian Library, the British Library, the London Metropolitan Archives, and the Architectural Association Photo Library and Archive was crucial in the processes of locating a number of obscure editions and illustrations.

While this project was typed in the collective solitude of various libraries, it was written in the course of discussion and debate with friends and colleagues. I owe particular thanks to Emily Gee, of English Heritage, who replied to my tentative enquiry about women’s residences with enthusiasm and uncommon kindness. Both the Literary London Reading Group and the Literary London Society have, for many years, fostered an environment of informed but informal discussion, and for this I am grateful to Jenny Bavige, Martin Dines, Nick Bentley, Richard Dennis, Matthew Ingleby, Lara Atkin, Michael McCluskey, Luke Seaber – and especially Eliza Cubitt and Peter Jones. I am also grateful to Flore Janssen, Terry Elkiss and Deborah Mutch, whose collaborations on a number of projects related to Margaret Harkness have been invigorating and productive. My thanks also to Helena Goodwyn, Terri Mullholland, Lisa Mullen,
Helen Goodman, Ryan Powell, Tim Bell and Sarah Knor for illuminating discussions in cities around the globe, and at all times of day (and night); and also to Sara Lyons and Noah Moxham, for many years of intellectual support and engagement, as well as innumerable excellent meals and much general amity.

My thanks also to Stephanie Bannister, Eliza Cubitt, Terry Elkiss, Flore Janssen, Sara Lyons, Lisa Mullen and Terri Mullholland for their comments on the final draft of this book. I am immensely grateful to Michelle Houston, Ersev Ersoy and Julian Wolfreys at Edinburgh University Press for their interest and support of this project through all of its stages, as well as to the anonymous readers who provided important comments and insights on the manuscript.

My greatest debt is to my grandmother, D. Sylvia Stephenson, who insisted that any book with a child in it was suitable for children – and thus encumbered me with much of Dickens at a young age. While my interest in literature was established by the collections of nineteenth-century authors in her library, it was her own stories of life in London – and elsewhere, through two world wars – that captivated me most. This book is for her, with my eternal gratitude and admiration.
