Contents

List of Illustrations vii
Series Editor’s Preface ix
Acknowledgements xi

1. Housing Crisis: Home and Identity in Nineteenth-Century Literary London 1

Part I: Structures of Authority: The Model Dwellings Movement

2. ‘Out of its torpid misery’: Plotting Passivity in Margaret Harkness’s A City Girl 19

3. ‘More making the best of it’: Living with Liberalism in Mary Ward’s Marcella 36

4. Labour Leaders and Socialist Saviours: Individualism and Collectivism in Margaret Harkness’s George Eastmont, Wanderer 55

Part II: Chambers, Lodgings and Flats: Purpose-built Housing for Working Women

5. Irritating Rules and Oppressive Officials: Convention and Innovation in Evelyn Sharp’s The Making of a Prig 75

6. The Kailyard Comes to London: The Progressive Potential of Romantic Convention in Annie S. Swan’s A Victory Won 95

7. Fugitive Living: Social Mobility and Domestic Space in Julia Frankau’s The Heart of a Child 111
Part III: ‘Thinking Men’ and Thinking Women: Gender, Sexuality and Settlement Housing

8. ‘Vital friendship’: Sexual and Economic Ambivalence in Rhoda Broughton’s Dear Faustina 133

9. ‘Twenty girls in my attic’: Spatial and Spiritual Conversion in L. T. Meade’s A Princess of the Gutter 154

Part IV: Homes for a New Era: London Housing Past and Present

10. ‘To make a garden of the town’: The Nineteenth-Century Legacy of the Hampstead Garden Suburb 175

Epilogue 192

Bibliography 196
Index 211