Much of this book was written during the Covid-19 pandemic and the various intensities of lockdown, after I had returned to research following a period of maternity leave. I am sure that my husband, Aidan, and son, Seamus, would agree the book was a shared challenge. First and foremost, then, I give thanks to Aidan and Seamus for their support and patience, and for their welcome distractions that offered some useful perspective. I dedicate this book to Seamus and our newest arrival, Amaia.

Crucial to the book is of course the stories of the women featured within it. I offer sincere thanks and gratitude for your time and sharing your lives with me. I hope I have done your stories, insights and reflections some justice. Most of the women in the book are anonymised therefore I cannot thank them by name personally, but there are so many who enriched the book, challenged me and opened up new lines of thinking. I would also like to warmly thank the women who helped organise focus groups and who participated in them. I would like to thank the Muslim Heritage Centre and Oldham Library for helping to support the research by hosting focus groups, and to those members of the public who attended and provided their points of view. Thank you to the artists Sara Choudhrey, Zarah Hussain and Azraa Motala for allowing me to reproduce their artwork.
I would like to take some space to also thank the many people who kindly agreed to comment on different chapters of the book. It was such a generous act especially during this difficult period of the pandemic. Reading and talking through your intelligent and perceptive comments in relation to the chapters was one of the highlights of my entire fellowship, a deeply rewarding process, and pushed me forward. So sincere thanks to Karen Patel, Bridget Byrne, Saira Hassan, Jana Wendler, Katie Higgins, Fran Lloyd, Paul Long, Tariq Jazeel and Fiona Hackney. Any flaws and errors in the finished work are mine alone.

I would particularly like to thank Bridget Byrne for her mentorship during the Arts and Humanities Research Council Fellowship and continued support throughout the twists and turns of the exhibition and book writing. And my becoming a mother for the first time in the middle of it all. Your guidance has been invaluable.

Deep thanks to Uma Kothari who supported the development of the grant proposal, and also to the late Claire Dwyer who gave her time to discussing the ideas at a formative stage. Claire’s work inspired the work in so many ways, and the loss to the field is still felt.

I would like to thank the five artists who helped to co-curate the Beyond Faith exhibition, and who showed their wonderful artwork: Fatimah Fagihassan, Usarae Gul, Robina Akhter Allah, Aida Foroutan and Shabana Baig. I would like to thank Saira Hassan for acting as Research Assistant for the youth workshops and sincere thanks to Jana Wendler for project managing the exhibition film, exhibition brochure, events and evaluation. Many thanks to Ricardo Viela for creatively and thoughtfully shooting the exhibition films. Thank you more widely to The Whitworth and to Alistair Hudson, Esme Ward, Maria Balshaw for variously supporting the ideas for the exhibition and the exhibition launch. Particular thanks to Uthra Rajgopol and Andrew Vaughn for co-curating the exhibition. Also thanks to the audiences of the exhibition, especially those who left feedback in the visitor book, visitor cards or feedback sheets – there were so many fantastic, incisive, rewarding comments that everyone involved relished reading.
I would further like to thank my colleagues in Geography at the University of Manchester for supporting me during the process of the research and book writing. A special thank you to Aurora Fredriksen for her insights on work and life, and their imbrications. Also within Geography I would particularly like to thank the Cities, Politics and Economies Group. Many of the ideas for the book and its discussions were strengthened through audience feedback in various talks and presentations I gave, and by reviewer comments on articles and chapters. So I offer my gratitude to all the people who engaged with this research at various stages of its development.
