The Edinburgh Critical History of Twentieth-Century Christian Theology
The Edinburgh Critical History of Christian Theology
Series Editors: Russell Re Manning, Bath Spa University and Tom Greggs, University of Aberdeen

The Edinburgh Critical History of Christian Theology presents the history of Christian theology in an innovative way with critical essays addressing the emergence and development of the themes and problematics that characterise each period. Particular attention is given to the diffusion of themes across disciplinary, geographical and historical boundaries, and to the changing practices of Christian theology.

A key concern of the series will be to explore the ways in which themes and clusters of themes can be traced within and across historical periods, leading to a new and informative way of conceptualising the development of Christian theological thinking. In so doing, a guiding methodological assumption of the series is that the history of Christian theology is one of a series of encounters and negotiations between traditions and contexts. The thematic foci of the volumes range broadly across creedal and doctrinal loci as well as historical particularities.

The Edinburgh Critical History of Christian Theology reflects on how the dominant themes and problematic of a period took shape, were developed, and were bequeathed to subsequent generations; enabling both a re-evaluation of the dynamics of historical Christian theology and a ressourcement for contemporary Christian theologians and critical thinkers.
