Acknowledgments

I owe this book to the expertise, support, and kindness of so many people. I am humbled by their generosity and pleased to finally say my thanks for their many contributions to this project. Its shortcomings are the only thing to which I lay sole claim.

First and foremost, I wish to thank Richard Breitman. This book would not have been conceived or executed without him. His patience and dedication continue to astound me, and I look forward to having him ask me what is next. I am also thankful to Eric Lohr and Max Paul Friedman for their guidance during this project’s earlier iterations.

I am grateful for the institutional support I received from my professional home, the Mandel Center for Advanced Holocaust Studies, including the Independent Staff Research Fellowship that helped me carry this project across the finish line. Of course, the views expressed in this book are mine and do not represent those of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum (USHMM), its officers, or employees.
It is such a privilege to work among the many brilliant scholars and fellows who populate the Mandel Center. I am particularly indebted to my friends in the Mandel Writing Group, whose feedback, encouragement, and comradery were invaluable. Thank you, Kierra Crago-Schneider, Betsy Anthony, Rebecca Carter-Chand, Katherine White, Sara Brinegar, Dallas Michelbacher, and Jake Newsome. A special thanks to Steve Feldman for his support in shepherding this project toward publication.

Laura Hilton’s research on rumors has broadened my thinking and has been inspiring throughout this process. I would also like to acknowledge April Shelford, Amanda Harrison, Katie Lampadarios, Nick Underwood, Scott Blair, Rob Williams, Katrin Paehler, Ed Westermann, Jürgen Matthäus, and many others who offered good cheer and support over many years. A very special thanks to Matt Lantry for sharing his research with me and for providing notes on an early draft of this project.

I am indebted to the patience and expertise of staff at many archives and libraries in the United States, Germany, and the United Kingdom. I would like to thank the staff at the USHMM library and archives, in particular, for years of support. I owe a special debt of gratitude to Stephen Tyas for sharing his pioneering research and expertise of the Combined Services Detailed Interrogation Centre (CSDIC) files with me many years ago at the National Archives in Kew. I would also like to extend a heartfelt thanks to Emily Andrew and David J. Silbey at Cornell University Press for their support and to the anonymous readers whose feedback allowed me to see this book with fresh eyes.

My mother, Sabine, and my sister, Christine, have been my greatest supporters from day one, and no one will be more excited to have this book on their shelves. Thank you. For making all my days good, even the bad ones when the words just would not come, I would like to thank Rudi and Maddie. Without them, none of this would have been possible. Lauren was a source of calm and encouragement when I needed it most. I would like to thank Michael for the courage to embark on this project. And more than anything, I would like to thank Chris for the courage to finish it. I do not know how I would have done it without him, and I am so glad I did not have to.
