I owe so much of this book to the incredible guidance of Susanne Soederberg, whom I am lucky to call a friend. In later years, Genevieve LeBaron pushed me to forge on and has been incredibly supportive and wonderful. I could not have completed the book without the help of my dearest friends Marc Calabretta, Nadège Compaoré, and Rachel Phillips, who were with me every step of the way. In no particular order I would like to thank Nik Heynen, Marcus Taylor, Beverley Mullings, Pegah Rajabi, Ahad Bhagat, Villia Jefremovas, Margaret Little, Lama Tawakkol, Michael Clark (University of Pittsburgh), Laura Vaz-Jones, Martin Danylyuk, Mat Paterson, Andrew Nguyen, Sarah Sharma, Jacob Robbins-Kanter, Gavin Fridell, and my department at Queen’s Politics, without which I would not have been able to complete this book. I would also like to thank my former colleagues at the University of Manchester including the CGP and GPE clusters with a special shout out to Veronique-Pin Fat for her mentorship.

A special thanks to Jim Lance for believing in this book and for seeing this project through.

Above all, I owe much of this book to those who shared their time and expertise with me during my fieldwork. I was lucky to have made many connections with relevant social justice NGOs who helped shape some of my thinking around forced displacement in contemporary capitalism (BAAM, RCK, DRC, and UNHCR), I interviewed people who continued to face forced displacement and while there is no satisfying way to acknowledge the extractive process of research, I am forever indebted to those who took the time to speak to me.

This book was funded through an IDRC Doctoral Research Award which fostered an affiliation with Professor Luke Obala at the University of Nairobi, Ontario Graduate Scholarship, and a WC Good Memorial Fellowship. It was also funded by a generous subvention from Saint Mary’s University.
