Acknowledgments

I have benefited greatly from the intellectual sustenance and warmth of friends, colleagues, and teachers, including Enam Al-Wer, Edna Andrews, Christina Bratt-Paulston, David Britain, Erin Callahan, Rebecca Clift, Giles Dudley, Luciana Fellin, Gustavo Procopio Furtado, Robin Hewat, Jane Hindley, Hae-Young Kim, Shiu-Lu Liu, Michael Newcity, Liliana Paredes, Peter Patrick, Ian Rowen, Dave Sayers, Alison Sealey, Yasemin Soysal, Julie Tetel Andresen, Jennifer Wei, Jason Whittaker, and Billy Zaidi. My sincere apologies to anyone I have inadvertently left off this list. I am grateful for the probing questions and spirited debate among students in my annual Language and Politics seminar at Duke University; I have learned more from them than I have taught them. The magnanimity and pragmatism of the people of Taiwan are qualities celebrated in this book.

Special thanks go to A-chin Hsiau, who inspired me to begin this research for my PhD dissertation, and, along with Hsin-huang Michael Hsiao, kindly sponsored me as a visiting scholar at the Institute of Sociology at Academia Sinica, Taipei, in 2015. Rosa Wu and Chung Ting-yu were indispensable research assistants on this project. Dick Watts read the original proposal; the series editors, Dave Britain and Crispin Thurlow, provided helpful comments on the final drafts; while Lara Wysong at De Gruyter shepherded this book through the production process. Cat Thomas did a formidable job of copy-editing and fact-checking, and Michael Turton graciously read the draft manuscript in its entirety. All blunders remain resolutely mine.

Research for this book was generously funded by the UK Economic and Social Research Council; the Centre for Chinese Studies at the National Central Library, Taipei; and the Chiang Ching-kuo Foundation for International Scholarly Exchange. It would not have been possible to write it without their support. Part of chapter six was previously published in 2014 as “English for all? Neoliberalism, globalization, and language policy in Taiwan” in Language in Society (Vol. 43, No. 5). I thank Cambridge University Press for permission to reproduce parts of that article here.

Last, but by no means least, my parents Mary, Vic, and Michael, and my brother Robbie, have always encouraged me in my pursuits of verbal sparring, language games, and crosswords. My decision to return to graduate school was sparked by Dominika Baran lending me a book on sociolinguistics; she has always been my intellectual partner, and she eventually agreed to be my wife. Our daughter, Salomé, who can usually be found busily writing her own stories, gives me hope for the world. This book is dedicated to them all.

https://doi.org/10.1515/9781614514640-201