Acknowledgments

This book was originally published in Hebrew by Yad Vashem (2012) as part of my academic work as a historian of the Holocaust and Polish Jewry. My first book, on the Jews of Białystok, was published in 2008 by Brandeis University Press. Due to the contribution of this book on the Jews of Kielce to Holocaust research, I made sure that it, too, would be published in English. The translation was subsidized at the recommendation of my colleague, Dr. Marcus Silber of the Department of Jewish History at the University of Haifa, via The Wolfson Academic Chair, and was supported by the Association of Kielce Jews in New York, headed by Manny Bekier. In addition, Yaacov Kotlicki offered a great deal of support to this project: he played a large role in publishing the book as well as acquiring photographs. Both Manny Bekier and Yaacov Kotlicki are second-generation Holocaust survivors.

In regard to the English edition of the book, I also wish to thank Jacek Młynarczyk, a Polish historian of repute and a loyal friend, for his generous assistance in collecting the material from the archive in Ludwigsburg, Germany. I owe profound and special gratitude to the late Yitzhak Bauer, my dear friend, a Holocaust survivor and an excellent scholar from the town of Buczacz, Galicia, who with boundless devotion helped me to translate manuscripts in various languages, without which the study would have been deficient. Among those whom I interviewed in the course of my research, I shall always remember Rafael Blumenfeld, a prodigious educator, who before passing away devoted unlimited time to me and equipped me with important material on contemporary events. I am especially grateful to Dr. Daniel Uziel, director of the photo archives at Yad Vashem, Jerusalem, and I sincerely thank all members of the archive staff at this institution.

My friend of many years, Michael Berenbaum, who recommend that the book be published in English, deserves special gratitude.

Special thanks I owe to the American judge Thomas Buergenthal, whom I was able to interview in the summer of 2004. When the Kielce Ghetto was established, Buergenthal was seven years old and ten years old when he arrived with the last Jews of Kielce to Auschwitz. The value of the information he gave me and the details he remembered are a precious treasure that I will always take with me.

This book is dedicated to my close friend the late Yisrael Gutman, in whose company I built much of my academic career and development. The knowledge that I derived from being in proximity to him cannot be weighed in gold.
