

List of Contributors

Catherine Andreyev is an Emeritus Associate Professor in Modern European History at the University of Oxford. Her publications include Vlasov and the Russian Liberation Movement 1941–1945: Soviet Reality and Émigré Theories (1987) and Russia Abroad: Prague and the Russian Diaspora, 1918–1938 (2004; co-written with Ivan Savicky).

Åsmund Egge is Professor Emeritus at the University of Oslo. Among his publications are books and articles about Russian and Soviet history, Russian-Norwegian relations, and the history of Communism. His works in English include: The Kirov Enigma: The Murder that Unleashed Stalin's Terror (e-book); Red Star in the North: Communism in the Nordic Countries (chief editor); and “Soviet Diplomacy and the Norwegian Left, 1921–1939”, in K. A. Myklebost and S. Bones, eds., Caution & Compliance: Norwegian-Russian Diplomatic Relations 1814–2014 (Orkana Akademisk, 2012).

Vladislav Ivanovich Goldin is Doctor of Historical Sciences, Professor of the Department of Regional Studies, International Relations, and Political Sciences at the Northern (Arctic) Federal University, Honorary Scientist of the Russian Federation, Honorary Worker of the Higher School of Russian Federation, and member of the Russian Academy of Natural Sciences. He has authored about 600 publications (530 academic works, including thirty books).

Klas-Göran Karlsson is Professor of History at Lund University, Sweden. Since 1987, when he defended his PhD thesis on history teaching and politics in Russia and the Soviet Union from 1900–1940, he has written extensively on the Soviet history of historiography, nationality problems, state-organized terror, and migration processes. He has also published several works on genocide studies and European uses of history. At present, he is conducting a large research project on the historical lessons of Communism and Nazism.

Ekaterina S. Kotlova (MPhil in Indigenous studies; Specialist degree in History) is a historian and the art editor of the Arktika i Sever (Arctic and North) journal at NArFU (Arkhangelsk, Russia). Her research interests include cultural anthropology and the social, economic, and ethnic aspects of twentieth-century history of the Arctic and North.

Kari Aga Myklebost is Professor of History and Barents Chair in Russian Studies at UiT The Arctic University of Norway. She has published articles and book chapters on various aspects of the historical relations between Norway and Russia throughout the 19th and 20th centuries, with a special focus on the northernmost regions of the two states. Her works include studies in diplomatic and economic relations, scientific relations in polar research, and state policy towards northern minority groups. She is currently working on a biography of Olaf Broch, Norway's first professor of Slavonic Studies and a topical figure in Norwegian-Russian relations during the first half of the twentieth century.

Jens Petter Nielsen is Professor of History at the Department of Archaeology, History, Religious Studies, and Theology, UiT The Arctic University of Norway. He has published extensively on Soviet history and historiography, as well as on Russian-Norwegian relations in the 19th and 20th centuries. Lately, he has edited Sblizhenie: Rossiia i Norvegiia v 1814–1917 godakh (Getting closer: Norway and Russia 1814-1917) (Moscow: Ves Mir publishing house, 2017).

Ekaterina Rogatchevskaia is Lead Curator of Central and East European Collections at the British Library. She has taught various courses related to Russian literature, language, and culture at the Russian State University for Humanities (Moscow), Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities, London School of Economics and Imperial College London, and has worked as a research fellow at the Institute of World Literature (Moscow). In 2017, she published Russian Revolution: Hope, Tragedy, Death (London: British Library Publishing, 2017).

Andrei Rogatchevski is Professor of Russian Literature and Culture at UiT The Arctic University of Norway. Among his latest co-edited volumes/thematic clusters are “Filming the Strugatskiis,” Science Fiction Film and Television

8, no. 2 (2015), “Russophone Periodicals in Israel,” Stanford Slavic Studies 47 (2016), “Madness and Literature,” Wiener Slawistischer Almanach 80 (2017), and “Russian Space: Concepts, Practices, Representations,” Nordlit 39 (2017).

Ole Martin Rønning is Director at the Labor Movement Archives and Library, Oslo. He obtained his PhD in 2010 for his thesis “Stalin’s Students: Comintern Cadre Schools and the Communist Party of Norway, 1926–1949”. He has published several articles about the Norwegian and Scandinavian Labor movements. His key fields of research are: Norwegian/Scandinavian Labor, the Comintern and international Communist movement, and relations between the Soviet Union and Norwegian/Scandinavian Labor.

Victoria V. Tevlina is Professor and Doctor of Historical Sciences at UiT The Arctic University of Norway and Professor at Northern (Arctic) Federal University (Russia). She has published monographs, book chapters, and articles on the following topics: socioeconomic and sociocultural developments in Russia; the relationship between Russia and Norway from the nineteenth century to the present; the social history (welfare system, social education, etc.) of Russia and the Nordic states; and Russian emigration to Norway.

Hallvard Tjelmeland is Professor of Twentieth-Century History at UiT The Arctic University of Norway. His expertise includes regional, immigration, media, and labor movement history. Over the last fifteen years, he has written extensively on Cold War history and Norwegian-Soviet/Russian relations. Tjelmeland is participating in the program “In a World of Total War: Norway 1939–1945” and leads the research group “From North Front to Ice Front.”

Tatyana Troshina is Doctor of Historical Sciences and Professor at the Northern (Arctic) Federal University. Her research encompasses the sociocultural and local history of Russia’s European North in the first decades of the twentieth century. She has authored 250 academic publications, including ten monographs.