Acknowledgments

This book has been long in the making, as with many such efforts, and many people have helped along the way. First, for the generous encouragement they have given me, I wish to thank my colleagues—Adeed Dawisha, John Paden, Mark Katz, and Richard Stillman—in the Public Affairs Department at George Mason University. Second, both material support and the solitude required for study and contemplation were generously provided by the George Mason University Summer Stipend program, the university’s Fenwick Library fellowship, grants from the Lucius Littauer Foundation, the Truman Institute of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, and the Rockefeller Foundation’s Summer Residency program at Bellagio, Italy. To the administrators and managers of these programs—Charles Rowley, Charlene Hurt, Bill Frost, Harold Schiffrin, Susan Garfield, and the late Roberto Celli—much gratitude is offered.

I have many fond remembrances of discussions into the late evening hours with friends, experts, and professionals in the field of US and Middle East policy. A debt of gratitude, therefore, must be paid to Joseph Sisco, Bill Quandt, Hal Saunders, Roy Atherton, Thomas Pickering, Samuel Lewis, and Jimmy Carter, here in the United States; to Osama el Baz, Mohammed Wahby, Tahseen Basheer, Ahmed Baha Eldine, Mohammed Heikel, Sayid Yassin, Ali Dessouki, and Said Ibrahim in Egypt; to Hanna Sinora, Ziad Abu Zayyad, Gabi Baramki, and Emile Sahliyeh in the West Bank; and to Abba Eban, Ariel Sharon, Yossi Ben Aharon, Roni Milo, Elihau Ben Eliassar, Shlomo Avineri, Raymond Cohen, Simcha Dinitz, Mordecai Gazit, Menachem Milson, Yiehel Kadishai, Harry Hurvitz, Rivka Yadlin, Aharon Kleiman, Itamar Rabinovich, Gaby Sheffer, Emanuel Sivan, Shimon Shamir, Avner Yaniv, Moshe Maoz, Gadi Gilbar, Mark Heller, Hannoch Smith, Gabi Ben Dor, Martin Kramer, Dan Meridor, Meir Buber, Yossi Kostiner, Nimrod Novik, and Amitzai Baram in Israel.

Acknowledgment and thanks go to Ginny McCaslin, Carole Poland, and Mary Blackwell and her group of extraordinary typists at George Mason University—especially Anne Bonanno—for their technical support and assistance. I am now convinced that a modern word processor is superior to my twenty-year-old portable typewriter. Pam Ferdinand is due a particular thanks for her patience, skill, and good cheer in making this work more literate.
A special word must go to my dear mother and father, without whom this project could hardly have been conceived, never mind completed. Their faith and steadfastness will always be treasured. And special thanks go to my wife, Sandy, and children, Ellen, Marcy, Sharon, and Danny, whose confidence and love have been a source of great comfort during the bleakest moments of this enterprise. Sandy, in particular, has been the necessary element in a marriage of thirty-one years that has brought great joy to this struggling author. It is to her and the special way she brings happiness to our life that I dedicate this book.
