Persons other than the authors have variously contributed to the body of work represented by this volume; some provided inspiration, encouragement, or example that influenced our development as scholars; others helped to prepare these pages for publication in this form. Also, over the years our research has been supported by a number of funding agencies. We welcome this opportunity to thank all concerned.

Scholarly legacies for each of us were formed in different ways by the late James Smoot Coleman, H. H. Wilson, Francis D. Wormuth, Thomas Hodgkin, and Hugh H. Smythe.

In the preparation of this book for publication we are grateful for the dedicated and painstaking labor, attention, and care of Anne Moran, Nicole Moore, Geoff Bergen (who is also coauthor of one of the essays), our editor, Gia Hamilton, and our publisher, Lynne Rienner. In each case, an engaging personal style helped make our job a pleasure. The support of Eve Sklar has been absolutely vital.

Funding agencies that have supported our research during a period of thirty-plus years include the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Social Science Research Council, the American Council of Learned Societies, and the Fulbright Scholars Program. Our work has also been supported by these institutions: Princeton University, the Institutes of Commonwealth Studies (London and Oxford), Brandeis University, the University of California (Los Angeles), the University of Ibadan, the University of Zambia, the University of Manchester, the Harry S. Truman Research Institute (Hebrew University of Jerusalem), Rutgers University, the University of Lagos, Bayero University (Kano), and the University of Southern California.

In general, the experience of presenting this volume has been a satisfying reminder that in the lonely pursuit of scholarship, scholars are never alone: in that sense we are indebted to a roster of folk too numerous to tabulate, but we appreciate them.
