About the Contributors

Naomi Chazan is senior lecturer in political science and African studies and head of the African Studies Department at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. She was recently visiting professor at Radcliffe College and at Harvard University.

Cyril Koffie Daddieh is visiting professor of government at Colby College in Maine. He holds a PhD from Dalhousie University.

Michael Ford is associate professor of politics at Hampshire College in Massachusetts.

Kenneth Good is associate professor of political and administrative studies at the University of Zambia.

Frank Holmquist is professor of politics at Hampshire College, where he has been associate dean of the School of Social Science.

Jon Kraus is professor of political science at the State University of New York, Fredonia.

Carol Lancaster is at the Institute for International Economics in Washington, D.C. She was previously director of the African Studies Program at Georgetown University.

Barbara Lewis is professor of political science at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, New Jersey.

Michael F. Lofchie is professor of political science and director of the African Studies Center at the University of California, Los Angeles.

Janet MacGaffey is research associate at the Institute for the Study of Human Issues in Philadelphia. She is author of Entrepreneurs and Parasites: The Struggle for Indigenous Capitalism in Zaire (Cambridge, 1987).

Timothy M. Shaw is professor of political science and director of the Centre for African Studies at Dalhousie University, where he also coordinates the International Development Studies program.
PART 1
Popular Responses