Numerous people and institutions helped make possible the research on which this book is based. First, and most important, I want to thank the people of the Ijesa communities, whose insights and hospitality have led to a rich and enjoyable research experience that has continued over many years. Beginning with the Ijesa market women who welcomed me and introduced me to the complexities of their lives in the early 1970s, and continuing through many subsequent visits to Ilesa and surrounding towns and villages, I have been privileged to learn not only about Yoruba culture but also about communities in general. Several people have been especially important in this process: Dr. and Mrs. E. A. Ifaturoti, Justice and Mrs. Kayode Eso, Oba Oladele Olashore, and Professor Bolanle Awe. Others, including Chief A. O. Lamikanra, Dr. Tina Fatiregun, and Mr. and Mrs. Akin Akinola, have assisted me at crucial times in my research. Many others, some of whom are named in the text, helped me to understand aspects of their lives and activities; I am grateful to all.

Colleagues and friends in Ife, Oshogbo, Ibadan, and Lagos all encouraged and assisted me over the years. To Agbo Folarin, Richard Olaniyan, Nike Davies Okundaye, Judith Asuni, Nina Mba, and Nike Afolabi, I say e se pupo (thank you) for all you have done. I am grateful to Bodunde Motoni for his research assistance throughout most of the research period, and to others associated with the Nike Centre for Art and Culture for their help at key points.

The Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Obafemi Awolowo University provided me with formal affiliation as a visiting professor at the beginning of the research; that affiliation has continued informally in subsequent years. Colleagues in the department have been gracious hosts, and I thank them.

The research was supported by the National Science Foundation (grant BNS-9120584), which not only provided funds for fieldwork but also later provided funds for several undergraduate students at the University of Wisconsin–Parkside to work with me in data analysis, through Research Experience for Undergraduates grants. The University of Wisconsin–Parkside Committee on Research and Creative Activity also provided funding at several crucial times. During part of the research period I was co-director of a U.S. Information Agency University Affiliations grant for a faculty exchange between the University of Wisconsin–Parkside and Obafemi Awolowo University. That grant supported some of my travel to Nigeria.

I would like to thank the University of Wisconsin–Parkside undergraduates who worked with me at various stages, several of whom contributed important insights. They include Kim Boyajian, Jackie Handford, Mary Ritchie, Heather Spencer, and Joel Tishken. Staff of the university’s Media Services Department have also been very helpful; Kate Pietri’s and Don Lintner’s assistance with maps, photographs, and preparation of the companion videotape is greatly appreciated. I would also like to thank my colleagues in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the University of Wisconsin–Parkside, who have understood the importance of my regular trips to Nigeria and who have supported me throughout.

Many colleagues both in Nigeria and the United States have commented on aspects of the research and have assisted me in a variety of ways. In particular, I want to thank Niyi Akinnaso, Paulina Makinwa-Adebusoye, Jacob Olupona, Tola Pearce, Josef Gugler, Deborah Winslow, Brooke Grundfest Schoepf, and Michael McNulty. The enthusiastic interest of Bridget Julian, editor at Lynne Rienner Publishers, helped bring the project to completion.

This book is dedicated to my parents, William and Ida Trager, who first introduced me to Nigeria, and to my husband, Dick Ammann, who has helped make possible my many recent journeys there.
