This book grew out of a joint project on Mexico run by the Woodrow Wilson Center’s Latin American Program and the Council on Latin American and Iberian Studies at Yale University, supported by a generous grant from the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation.

In May 2000, the Wilson Center and Yale University sponsored a conference, “Mexico at the Millennium,” which was an important step in the evolution of the book. The editors are particularly grateful to Gilbert Joseph and Beatriz Riefkohl at Yale University, David Lorey at the Hewlett Foundation, and Amelia Brown, Heather Golding, and Allison Garland at the Wilson Center for helping to make the conference possible. Most of the authors presented initial versions of their chapters at the conference, revised them, and then, because of the dynamic developments in Mexico over the past two years, revised them again. We appreciate their efforts. We would also like to acknowledge several presenters and commentators at the conference whose comments during the meeting influenced the development of this book in significant ways: Jesús Reyes Heroles, Adolfo Gilly, Erica Pani, Gustavo Vega, Victoria Murillo, Carlos Hurtado, Santiago Levy, José Luis Orozco, Guadalupe González, Rafael Fernández de Castro, Yemile Mizrahi, and David Brooks.

During the preparation of the manuscript, several colleagues lent invaluable assistance. Yemile Mizrahi, Alejandra Vallejo, and Cynthia Arnson commented on parts of the manuscript; Lía Limón, Craig Fagan, and Marianne Benet provided critical research; and Allison Garland, Carlisle Levine, Marianne Benet, Marisol Corral, Priyanka Ananda, and Samantha Newbold helped edit the final manuscript. We are grateful to all for their help in bringing the book to fruition.
