Acknowledgments

This book developed from research first presented at the Dakar Conference on the African Bourgeoisie in December 1980, sponsored by the Joint Committee on African Studies of the American Council of Learned Societies and the Social Science Research Council, the Council for Economic and Social Research in Africa, and the Environment and National Development in Africa Program (ENDA). As local hosts of the conference, A.S. Bujra, Jacques Bugnicourt, and Liberty Mahlanga were especially generous with their time, resources, and staff; the editor and the Joint Committee on African Studies are extremely grateful for their kindness and advice. The support of Peter Anyang' Nyong'o was critical to the success of the conference. The Western and Eastern Africa Regional Offices of the Ford Foundation provided financial support so the conference could be held in an African city. The support of Goran Hyden and Robert Drysdale and their staffs at the regional offices is deeply appreciated.

Martha Gephart of the Social Science Research Council deserves praise for guiding the project to publication. Sue Warga and Lily Heom, staff members of the Social Science Research Council, also deserve recognition for their dedicated efforts. Here at Santa Cruz, Wendy Fassett, Kay Mohlman, Brian Folk, and Dana Priest assisted in the editing and preparation for publication. Robert Price of the University of California, Berkeley, was invaluable as a critic and evaluator of the book, and Allen Isaacman and Jane Guyer contributed analyses that improved the book immensely.

Others provided assistance, ideas, and valuable criticism. Michael Cowen, Bjorn Beckman, Michael Chege, Wally Goldfrank, Bill Friedland, Stan Trapido, A. Founou, and Samir
Amin contributed in diverse ways to the ideas contained in this book. Robert Alford and the working group on the state here at Santa Cruz, together with the Joint Committee on African Studies, provided critical support. The financial support of the Academic Senate Research Committee of UCSC is also gratefully acknowledged.

Finally, Lynne Rienner and her staff are to be complimented for their advice, patience, and editorial assistance.
