Acknowledgments

Most of the chapters in this book were originally presented at the Twelfth Hendricks Symposium, "American Trade Policy in a Changed World Political Economy," sponsored by the Department of Political Science, University of Nebraska–Lincoln, April 5–6, 1991. The symposium, organized by the editor of this volume, was part of the Nebraska Lectures in American Government and Politics made possible through the generosity of G. E. Hendricks, an alumnus of the University of Nebraska and later a Colorado attorney. Mr. Hendricks had a lively interest in American politics and was especially concerned about the limitation of public discussion during the early 1950s. Therefore, during the period 1949 to 1957, he gave to the University of Nebraska Foundation a substantial sum of money to be used to deal with "current controversial political questions . . . in a non-partisan, unbiased manner." Mr. Hendricks believed that a more intelligent examination and consideration of political questions would lead to better government and public policy. The symposium, sponsored with his gift, and this volume were designed to promote these aims.

In addition to the Hendricks Fund, several others at the University of Nebraska contributed generously to the funding of the symposium: the Montgomery Lecture Series, the University Research Council, and the College of Arts and Sciences. Valuable staff assistance was provided by the Department of Political Science, in particular by Helen Sexton, Jan Edwards, and Royce Ammon. The support of John Peters, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, is especially noteworthy. Not only has he provided financial support for various Hendricks symposia, but he has consistently supported the editorial activities of the IPE Yearbook and its editors.

The volume also benefited from the cooperation and assistance of a great many other individuals and institutions. My thanks to the Yearbook board of editors and all those colleagues who assisted in the evaluation of the manuscripts. William Browne is due special thanks for reading and commenting on the entire volume. It no doubt would be a better book had I heeded all his advice. Andrew Cooper's work on Chapter 6 was supported by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada. He and Richard Higgott are also grateful to Kim Nossal, Robert Young, T. K. Warley, Robert Solfe, and Stuart Harris for helpful comments on earlier drafts of their chapter. The research of Raymond Hopkins in Chapter 7 was supported by the U.S. Agency for International Development, and additional assistance was provided by Nien-he Hsieh and Mark Hopkins. Harald von Witzke and Ulrich Hausner conducted the research for Chapter 8 with the assistance of a grant from the Agricultural Experiment Station, University of Minnesota, and the North Central Experiment Station Regional Project NC-194. Ford Runge's research (Chapter 9) is based in part on his work with the 1991 State of Food and Agriculture Report issued by the Food and Agriculture Organization in Rome.

Finally, my thanks to my colleague and Yearbook coeditor, David Rapkin, for his assistance, encouragement, and intellectual inspiration throughout the life of this project; and to Gia Hamilton, project editor at Lynne Rienner Publishers, with whom it is always a joy to work.

William P. Avery