My deepest gratitude goes to the Cameroonian footballers and their families in Buea, Limbe, Bamenda, and the countryside for their hospitality, patience, friendship, and knowledge. Unfortunately, in order to safeguard their anonymity, I cannot thank them individually. In this book I tried my best to do justice to their experiences and perspectives. I thank them for sharing with me their lives, dreams, struggles, and triumphs and for accepting me as a friend and researcher. I am also indebted to the football coaches, managers, and team staff members who facilitated my fieldwork in their clubs and academies. I thank them for allowing me to train in their clubs, ask countless questions, and probe their personal lives.

At the University of Amsterdam, where this project started, I was privileged to be mentored by very generous scholars. Niko Besnier assembled and led an outstanding research team on sports and globalization and was very generous with his feedback and critique. Peter Geschiere offered invaluable and detailed comments on the book, illuminated exciting new perspectives on my ethnography, and provided endless inspiration. I thank them both for guidance and support. The Department of Anthropology provided me with a dynamic academic home, and I greatly profited from the support from my colleagues. Apostolos Andrikopoulos, Dina Zbeidy, Arsenii Alenichev, Jordi Halfman, Anita Hardon, Rachel Spronk, Robert Pool, Amisah Zenabu Bakuri, Tanja Ahlin, Natashe Lemos Dekker, Julie McBrien, Eileen Moyer, Carla Rodrigues, Megan Raschig, Marten Boekelo, colleagues from the “Chemical Youth” and “Long Term Care” research groups—I thank them all for challenging workshops and encouraging conversations.

The research reported herein has received funding from the European Research Council under Grant Agreement 295769 for a project entitled “Globalization, Sport and the Precarity of Masculinity” (GLOBALSPORT). I owe to this project far more than simply a book title: the people involved in it profoundly shaped my work. I wish to thank the GLOBALSPORT team—Adnan Hossain, Daniel Guinness, Márk Hann, Domenica Gisella Calabrò, Sebastián Fuentes, Paweł Banaś, Michael K. Peters, Minke Nouwens, and Douglas K.
Acknowledgments

Thompson—for their friendship, inspiration, work, and support. I thank Susan Brownell for reading my early drafts and helping me formulate arguments more explicitly. Leo Hopkinson, Romit Chowdhury, and Mariane da Silva Pisani provided invaluable critical feedback.

My fieldwork in Cameroon would have been impossible without the help and guidance of my Cameroonian elders and friends. I thank Robert Mbe Akoko of the University of Buea and coach John Mayebi for guidance. I thank Akebegho Kingsley Akoh, Ravenstein Awuh (Crespo), and Mokom Njang (Abu) for their friendship and for welcoming me into their homes. I thank Emmanuel Mwambo for sharing with me his house in Limbe. At the University of Buea, Emmanuel Yenshu Vubo assisted me in obtaining the ethical clearance for this research.

I was also lucky to receive valuable support from a number of scholars all over the world. Walter Gam Nkwi, Rogers Tabe Egbe Orock, Francis Nyamnjoh, Basile Ndijo, Carmen Rial, Katrien Pype, Jarrett Zigon, James Esson, Paul Darby, Richard Giulianotti, John McManus, Sine Agerraard, Christian Ungruhe, Joseph Alter, Cheikh Tidiane Wane, William Kelly, Susana Narotzky, Tarminder Kaur, Dorothea E. Schulz, and Souleymane Diallo—I thank them all for their critical feedback. Elements from this book have been presented at various conferences and colloquiums: European Association for Social Anthropologists (EASA) Conference 2016 and 2018; American Anthropological Association (AAA) Annual Meeting 2016; African Studies Association of the United Kingdom (ASAUK) Conference 2018; University of Münster Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology Colloquium 2019; and African Studies Association (ASA) Virtual Annual Meeting 2021. I thank all the participants, panelists, and discussants for their constructive feedback. I also thank the two reviewers of this book who provided critical and encouraging comments. Thanks to Tom Bonnington, Marion Berghahn, and Lizzie Martinez at Berghahn Books for a smooth production process, and to Louise Chapman at Lex Academic for indexing.

I am grateful to the following publishers for permissions to republish revised selections from previous publications. Elements from “Becoming Useful and Humble: Masculinity, Morality, and Association Football in Cameroon,” Anthropological Quarterly 94(3): 411–42 (2021) are reprinted with the permission of George Washington University Institute for Ethnographic Research. Parts of “‘This Is a Business, Not a Charity’: Football Academies, Political Economy, and Masculinity in Cameroon,” in Sport, Migration, and Gender in the Neoliberal Age, edited by N. Besnier, D. G. Calabrò, and D. Guinness, 213–30 (London: Routledge, 2021) are reprinted with the permission of Taylor & Francis Group. Finally, elements from “Rethinking Masculinity in the Neoliberal Order: Cameroonian Footballers, Fijian Rugby Players, and Sen-

Much of this book was written in Utrecht (The Netherlands), a town that has over the years become my second (third? fourth?) home. My gratitude goes to the “De Kasko” living community that accepted me as a member and housemate. Ton Robben’s early input was paramount in my decision to pursue anthropology. Between Utrecht and Amsterdam, Ana Poças Ribeiro, Uwe Thümmel, and Elke Linders have always been fabulous friends and housemates.

Back in Belgrade (Serbia), my family and friends have been very supportive and patient throughout my long absences. Nikola and Tamara Milenković inspired me with their love, and in the meantime Iskra was born. I always looked up to my aunt, Dragana Zečević-Saveski, who instilled in me a sense for drama and a joyful perspective on life. I thank my cousin, Aleksa Saveski, for making me fall in love with Belgrade once again. Nothing would have been possible without the support of my parents, Branislava and Radivoj Kovač, who brought me up to appreciate others and always seek new challenges.

Finally, Joska Ottjes was there when the first phone call came that started this research project, and she stuck around despite the long-distance travels and long working hours. We shared the joys of travel and discovery, and she allowed me to pull through in difficult moments. Her family—Lia, Jan, and Jesse—have accepted me as their own. In the last stages of revision of this book our daughter Nina was born, launching us into a new stage of family life. I am grateful for her unwavering support during this journey, and I look forward to the adventures and challenges coming our way.
Map 0.1. The Southwest and Northwest Regions of Cameroon. United Nations map, public domain.