Acknowledgments

This book would not have happened if not for my Nigerien friends and interlocutors who generously spent time with me over the years, welcomed me during each visit, and were willing to share their stories with me. As you—my friends and interlocutors for this research—are in a precarious position I will refrain from mentioning your names. You know who you are. I want to thank especially my closest friends in Italy and Belgium, who helped me find others to talk to, and also those who generously invited me to their homes or out for ice cream or pizza, or invited me to transitional events in their lives, all while being extremely patient with my broken French and often naive questions and understanding.

I am extremely grateful for the kindness that I encountered in Niger a long time ago, which shaped my outlook on the world and taught me about the meaning of friendship, family, and solidarity. It helped me to understand with my heart, my interlocutors’ emphasis on Niger as a place of peace, respect, and kindness, as well as understanding the importance of munyal, or patience necessary for all research. I also want to thank other friends in Belgium and Italy that I engaged with during the research, which I will not name either as many of you have been or are close friends with some of my interlocutors. Thanks for sharing your perspectives and stories with me and helping me to navigate and understand better Belgian and Italian society.

There were many colleagues who encouraged me to write this book or to not give up; who read over different chapters or assisted in other ways with its making. Thank you, Sonia Sabelli, Brigitte Hipfl, Sarah Lunaček, Kristján Pór Sigurðsson, and James Gordon Rice. I am especially grateful to Scott Youngstedt—whom I met a long time ago in Niger and have stayed in contact with ever since—for encouraging me to continue writing and for replies to endless questions regarding Niger. Thank you also Paweł Lewicki for your help in understanding some of the dynamics in Brussels better.

Noel Salazar’s encouragement to write about this research during one of my fieldwork trips in Belgium was really inspirational during its early stages. Early on, Ashley Shelby gave me extremely useful comments on the manuscript, helping me to organize the discussion as well as pushing me to con-continue to write the book. I am thankful to all of these people. Chapter 10 derives partly from a paper that was composed for a conference, organized at the University of St. Andrews. Thanks to Daniel M. Knight and Rebecca Bryant for inviting me, and for providing valuable feedback on my presentation and pushing my thoughts on future aspirations. Anna Lísa Rúnarsdóttir gave me valuable feedback on the manuscript in addition to assisting with compiling it, and Ignacio Fradejas-García and Jana Ohanesyan created Map 6.1. on very short notice.

I am grateful to Berghahn Books, especially Tom Bonnington, assistant editor, for having faith in this manuscript and transforming it into a book. I want to thank the University of Iceland Research Fund for making the research possible with funding for data collection and fieldwork trips, and I also thank the Icelandic Research Fund (RANNIS) for funding for the project CERM (Creating Europe through Racialized Mobility, grant number 207062-051), which helped me to analyze and understand better the mobility issues at stake.

At last, I am grateful to my partner, Már, my three children, Mímir, Alexía, and Sól, and my parents, Eria and Loftur, for valuable assistance with making the research become a reality in personal and highly practical terms, as well as taking a part in some of the travelling that it involved. It was really rewarding to be able to bring together my personal life back “home” in Iceland and my Nigerien friends—some of whom I have known since I lived in Niger a long time ago.
