Contents

Acknowledgments — IX

General editor's foreword — XI

Abbreviations — XIII

Editor's introduction — 1
1. Remembering Samuel Pearce — 1
2. The life of Samuel Pearce — 2
2.1 “Life in a dear dying Redeemer”: early years in Plymouth and Bristol — 2
2.2 “For God’s glory”: the Birmingham pastorate — 6
2.3 “My invaluable Sarah”: marriage to Sarah Hopkins Pearce — 12
2.4 “Labours of love”: Pearce’s missionary activism — 19
2.5 “A religion for a dying sinner”: Pearce’s final days — 23
3. “He is another Brainerd”: why the Memoirs were written — 25
4. Publication history and notes on the text — 33
4.1 Publication history of the Memoirs — 33
4.2 Notes on the critical text — 35

Andrew Fuller, compiled, Memoirs of the Rev. Samuel Pearce

Introduction — 41

Chapter 1 Parentage of Mr. Pearce, his conversion, call to the ministry, and settlement at Birmingham — 42

Chapter 2 His laborious exertions in promoting missions to the heathen, and offering himself to become a missionary — 55

Chapter 3 His exercises and labours, from the time of his giving up the idea of going abroad to the commencement of his last affliction — 74

Chapter 4 An account of his last affliction, and the holy and happy exercises of his mind under it — 94

Memoranda Taken down occasionally by Mrs. Pearce, within four or five weeks of Mr. Pearce’s death — 118
Chapter 5 General outlines of his character — 121
Letters referred to in this chapter — 133
   No. I To a young man whose mind he perceived was bewildered with fruitless speculations. — 133
   No. II To a young gentleman of his acquaintance, who was then studying physic at Edinburgh. — 136
   No. III To a young lady at school, Miss A. H., a daughter of one of the members of his church — 139
   No. IV To a young Minister, Mr. C—of L—, on preparation for the pulpit — 140

Concluding reflections — 143

Appendix “Character of the Rev. Samuel Pearce” — 147

Index of Names — 149

Subject Index — 151