Acknowledgement

This collection of essays is the outcome of efforts by many, not least the authors of the essays with whom I have enjoyed working and from whose scholarship I have learned a great deal. I am especially thankful to Joy Schroeder, Nils Holger Petersen, Ute Possékél, and Roberto Tottoli who have continued to respond to my research questions well beyond their essays in this volume. Jason Kalman has long been a generous friend and valued conversation partner on the history of Jewish reception of Job.

Much of my research would not have been possible, especially during the pandemic, without the help of the staff of the Jean and Alexander Heard Libraries. Chris Benda, in particular, provided invaluable assistance in tracking down and accessing numerous resources in my research. Rebekah Rochte Votral has been a model of efficiency in her work as my indispensable research assistant.

Finally, it is my pleasure to thank the staff of De Gruyter for making this volume possible, beginning with Albrecht Döhnert, who had encouraged the initiation of this project. Aaron Sanborn-Overby was a source of encouragement and counsel, and Katrin Mittmann has been a patient editor who went beyond her call of duty to help me secure permission for some of the images included in this volume.
