First and foremost, many thanks go to the dear contributors who endured what may have been the most rigorous of all peer-review processes I have ever been a part of. One by one, each of them put forth a herculean effort. Many thanks go to Leonard Michael Koff for his support and care for the project and his kind advice throughout. Many heart-felt thanks go to Lara Dizeyee, who was the absolute first to symbolize for me the boundless beauty that is Kurdish language, literature and culture; and the first to encourage my efforts as a student and aspiring scholar in the field. Many thanks go to Ghazal Abbasy-Asbagh for showing me that extreme humility and gargantuan efforts don't have to be strange bedfellows. Many thanks go to Walter De Gruyter's Sophie Wagenhofer, who is as diligent as she is kind, and is as helpful as she is driven for excellence. Thank you, Sophie, as this project owes its beginning, middle, and end to you. A big thank you goes to Aaron Sanborn-Overby who is yet another huge blessing for authors of Walter De Gruyter: professionalism and kindness supreme. Last but not least, many thanks go to Monika Pflighar for her cordial and surgical efforts in the final stages of the manuscript.
