Acknowledgements

This book is the fruit of years of intellectual labor. I have been fortunate to have had the help, guidance, and friendship of a great many people and institutions. This book is a refined and improved version of my dissertation. Paul M. Cobb and Jamal J. Elias provided exceptional help and mentoring during my graduate studies, as I wrote my dissertation, and having continued to do so in the following years. My dissertation advisor, Joseph E. Lowry, was an exemplary advisor. He provided constant encouragement and detailed critique.

This study would not have been possible without the help of a variety of grants. The Mellon-Mays Fellowship has provided years of financial support and provided me with a community that has been key to my academic success. I am also grateful for a residency at the American Center for Oriental Research through an ACOR-CAORC grant during which I was able to conduct much of the research that guided this book. At the University of Pennsylvania, I was able to succeed thanks to a Benjamin Franklin Fellowship, the Foreign Language and Area Studies Fellowship, a fellowship from the Communication within the Curriculum program, a Janet Lee Stevens Fellowship, and a grant from the Digital Humanities Forum.

I am grateful to the BRAIS – De Gruyter Prize 2018 committee for honoring my work. As I have refined this monograph, I have benefitted greatly from the help of Robert Gleave and A. Kevin Reinhart. Marc Herman and Nicolai Sinai provided wonderfully detailed feedback on the majority of this book. I also wish to thank Sophie Wagenhofer, Katrin Mittmann, and André Horn at De Gruyter for all of their editorial assistance.

I am grateful as well to those who have read sections of this work and/or have helped me refine my arguments. In particular, I thank Ṣalāḥ Abū al-Ḥājj, Roger M. A. Allen, Jeffery Arsenault, Kameliya Atanasova, Carolyn Baugh, Joel Blecher, Carolyn Brunelle, Talya Fishman, Angela Giordani, Ari Gordon, Cameron Hu, Ali Karjoo-Ravary, Nicholas Harris, Renata Holod, Murad Idris, Matt Keegan, Susan MacDougall, Christian Mauder, Christian Müller, Tilman Neuschild, David S. Powers, Raha Rafii, Yossef Rapoport, Ryan Rittenberg, Noel Rivera, Mariam Sheibani, Thomas Levi Thompson, and Amir Toft. I also wish to thank my colleagues at Grinnell College for their help and encouragement. In particular, I wish to thank Shanna Benjamin, Caleb Elfenbein, and Karla Erickson.

I also thank the helpful and accommodating staffs at the British Library, the Bibliothèque nationale de France, the Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin, the Suleymaniye Library in Istanbul, the Leiden University Libraries, the Garrett Library at https://doi.org/10.1515/9783110605792-001

Princeton University, and the staff at the New York Public Library, particularly Thomas Lannon.

Finally, I thank Eiren Shea for unwavering emotional, intellectual, and editorial help during every stage of this book.