Acknowledgements

There are many people without whom this book would not have been possible, beginning with the SOTS members who heard our dialogue, “Churning the Mighty Waters: A Dialogue on Habakkuk 3”, at the Society’s winter meeting in January 2012 and were generous with their comments and encouragement to take the project forward. Our thanks are also due to John Barton for his comments on the proposal and to Aaron Sanborn-Overby, the content editor for theology and religion and the ancient Near East at De Gruyter, for his unfailing patience and support. We would also like to acknowledge our long-suffering families, and particularly Rebecca’s mother, who very kindly offered to help with the tedious job of trying to impose a uniform style on the earliest draft of the book. Any errors that remain are our own.

Finally, though, but by no means least, we would like to thank the other contributors for their willingness to be involved in this project and their commitment to it despite its long gestation. To enable dialogues such as these to function successfully requires in each participant openness to the other’s point of view, real engagement with their partner’s work, and readiness not only to give criticism but to receive it and to have the results—even when some of the comments received are quite sharp—shared with the wider world in print. Not everybody would be willing to make themselves vulnerable in this way, and we are grateful to them both as willing participants and for seeing the book through to its conclusion. We hope that they will feel they have genuinely gained something from the experience and that our readers will find observing the process of debate through these pages equally enjoyable, challenging and illuminating.

https://doi.org/10.1515/9783110606294-001