Acknowledgements

The editors would like to acknowledge a number of individuals and institutions whose help and support have been invaluable in the conception and completion of this volume. We thank the contributors, who have been very patient and helpful throughout the process of putting together this volume, in the face of many rounds of revisions and demands on their time from the editors. As editors, we have been fortunate to work alongside the contributors from our initial inquiries and theoretical meanderings, and we have been delighted to see how those exchanges of initial ideas and outlines led to the formulation of chapters that enhance our knowledge and understanding of the features and purposes of unity and division techniques, as they are manifested in a wide range of Greek and Roman texts and contexts.

Many of the contributions to this volume were given as papers at the international conference, “The Rhetoric of (dis)unity: Community and division in Greco-Roman prose and poetry”, which was held at the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens, 23–24 November 2017. That conference generated stimulating discussions of papers that formed the basis of many of the chapters included in this volume, as well as several other excellent papers that are not included here. We are grateful to all the participants, including those not represented in the volume: Brenda Griffith-Williams, Cristina Rosillo-Lopez, Ilias Arnaoutoglou, Maria Kythreotou, Maria S. Youni, Myrto Aloumpi, Noboru Sato, Robert Sing, Roger Brock, Stratis Kyriakidis and Tzu-I Liao.

The Department of Classics at the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens and the Department of Social and Political Science at the University of Cyprus are to be thanked for generously covering part of the expenses of the conference that allowed the idea of this volume to germinate and grow. Andreas Serafim would especially like to thank two institutions, Aristotle University of Thessaloniki (2019–2020) and University of Cyprus (2017–2019) for granting two postdoctoral fellowships, during which much of the work on the volume was undertaken; his new academic home, the Research Centre for Greek and Latin Literature of the Academy of Athens, for giving him mind-appeasing stability and excellent research facilities to timely complete this volume; and Millie Gall for reading and commenting on several drafts of the Introduction and of other chapters within the volume. Flaminia Beneventano della Corte is grateful to the University of Siena – Centro di Antropologia del Mondo Antico for supporting her research endeavours through a postdoctoral grant (2017–2018).
