

Acknowledgements

The present monograph is developed from my doctoral thesis which I successfully defended in November 2017, thanks to the generous funding of the Arts and Humanities Research Council (AHRC), and the encouragement and support of all my friends and colleagues at the Warburg Institute where I conducted my research.

The librarian scholars of the Warburg Institute played a crucial role in showing me innovative ways to pursue lines of inquiry that cross the boundaries of disciplines. Also, I thank all those who assisted me in identifying, locating and procuring access to manuscripts, including Alasdair Watson of the Bodleian Library; Farid Ghasemlou of the Majlis Library Tehran; Bink Hallum of the British Library; and especially the mysterious D.O.M.

The two pillars of my intellectual life throughout the four years of doctoral research at the Warburg Institute were the Arabic Philosophical Reading Class, convened by Charles Burnett, and the Esoteric Texts Reading Class, convened by Charles Burnett and Liana Saif: to my friends and fellow readers I extend my warmest gratitude.

Since November 2017, my understanding of Post-Avicennan thought in general, and the philosophical-theology of Fakhr al-Dīn al-Rāzī in particular has been greatly enriched by collaboration with all my colleagues on the DFG funded Heirs to Avicenna project, led by Peter Adamson at the Ludwig-Maximilians Universität, München: to Peter Adamson, Andreas Lammer and Fedor Benevich, I express my sincere thanks. For the deepening of my knowledge of psychology in the Arabic philosophical tradition, and specifically dream theory, I am grateful to Rotraud Hansberger; for schooling me in post-Avicennan physics and Ishrāqī philosophy, I thank Hanif Amin Beidokhti; and for enriching my understanding of developments in logic and epistemology amongst Avicenna's critics, I thank Abdurrahman Mihirig.

For their careful reading of an initial draft of this monograph, and all their insightful observations, I would like to express my gratitude to Peter Adamson, Kazuyo Murata, Frank Griffel and Jon McGinnis.

For the fundamental insight that informs this monograph—namely, that the engagement of Islamic philosophy and theology with occult thought was indeed profound—I owe a great debt to my countless conversations with Toby Mayer, whose advice and support sustained me throughout my research.

I thank my second advisor Ayman Shihadeh whose rigour and knowledge were vital for the formation of my thesis: only his deep insight into post-classical

VI — Acknowledgements

Islamic thought could have illumined for me the intellectual background of a text as mysterious and obscure as al-Sirr al-maktūm.

But most of all I would like to express my profound gratitude to my principle supervisor Charles Burnett: without his guidance, encouragement, wisdom and patience, none of this would have been possible.