

Acknowledgements

Upon finishing the editorship of the present volume, my thanks go out to many people, only a few of whom I can mention here.

First and foremost I would like to thank the members of the Academy working group “Social Legitimation of Knowledge Formations – Comparative Perspectives” at the Academy of the Sciences and Humanities in Hamburg, namely Silke Göttisch-Elten (European Ethnology), Christian-Albrechts-University at Kiel; Ulrike Jekutsch (Slavic Literature), University of Greifswald; Albert Meier (Modern German Literature), Christian-Albrechts-University at Kiel; Stefan Oeter (German and Foreign Public and International Law), University of Hamburg; Angelika Redder (German Linguistics), University of Hamburg; Anja Pistor-Hatam (Islamic Studies), Christian-Albrechts-University at Kiel; Monika Wagner (Art History), University of Hamburg; and Bettina Wahrig (History of Pharmacy and Science), Technical University of Braunschweig.

Over time we were joined by Cornelius Borck (History of Medicine and Science), University of Lübeck; Gabriele Clemens (Western European History and the History of European Integration), University of Hamburg, and Annette Haug (Classical Archaeology), Christian-Albrechts-University at Kiel, and we coopted Joachim Kurtz (Sinology and Intellectual History), Ruprecht-Karls-University of Heidelberg, as cooperating member of the Academy. Our meetings were exemplary instances of an exploratory openness for multiple perspectives based on disciplinary competence in the service of interdisciplinary cooperation, which proved a very fruitful mixture for highly inspirational discussions. Thanks to all of you for your perseverance, your commitment, and your humour.

I also want to thank the Academy of the Sciences and Humanities in Hamburg for their organisational support of our working group meetings, and for their generous funding of the 2017 international conference Competing Knowledges on a Global Scale and the 2018/19 Academy Lecture Series Wissen im Widerstreit. My special thanks go to the staff of the Academy office, who with efficiency and unshakeable friendliness managed all small and big catastrophes on the shortest notice.

I am very grateful to the contributors of this volume for their cooperation and patience in transforming their oral presentations of the conference and the lecture series mentioned above into a written form, in several instances adding substantial new material to back up their theses. Seeing so many cutting-edge analyses of our topic from different disciplinary angles gathered between two book covers leaves no doubt that it was worth the effort.

Finally, two more persons have to be mentioned by name. These are Dr. Florian Besthorn and Frederike Köpke, M.A. Their quiet dependability in completing their tasks, their competence, their flexibility and their patient kindness were a secure anchor in turbulent times.

Again: Many thanks to all of you!

Anna M. Horatschek

