Contents

Acknowledgements —— V

Contents —— VII

List of figures —— XI

List of tables —— XIII

List of abbreviations —— XV

1  Introduction —— 1

2  Background for studying flexibility in parts-of-speech systems —— 10
  2.1  Flexibility in parts-of-speech systems —— 10
  2.1.1  Flexible languages: Some examples —— 10
  2.1.2  On the existence of flexibility: Arguments and stances —— 13
  2.1.3  Zero-marked semantic type shift —— 22
  2.1.4  Interim summary —— 26
  2.2  Flexibility of parts of speech in Chinese context —— 27
  2.2.1  Review of studies in pre-modern times in China —— 28
  2.2.2  Review of studies in modern times in China —— 32
  2.2.3  Review of studies in recent times —— 44
    2.2.3.1  Zhang (2005) —— 45
    2.2.3.2  Bisang (2008a, 2008b) —— 52
    2.2.3.3  Zádrapa (2011) —— 57
  2.3  Summary and general discussion —— 66
  2.4  Preliminary outline of the present study —— 70

3  Syntactic observations on flexibility in Classical Chinese —— 78
  3.1  Argument structure constructions in Classical Chinese in general —— 78
    3.1.1  The intransitive and transitive argument structure constructions —— 79
    3.1.2  Ambiguous cases: alternative syntactic analyses of the V- or N-positions —— 89
3.2 Action-denoting lexemes in the syntactic position of an argument — 94
3.3 Object-denoting lexemes in the V-position — 96
3.3.1 The unmarked [NP0V] structure — 100
3.3.1.1 NP0 = Pronoun — 100
3.3.1.2 NP0 = Lexical NP — 101
3.3.1.3 Summary — 104
3.3.2 The marked [NP0–M–V] structure — 104
3.3.2.1 SHI- or ZHI-construction — 105
3.3.2.2 Marked passive(-like) constructions — 106
3.4 Summary and discussion — 107

4 Cognitive-semantic foundations of flexibility in Classical Chinese — 110
4.1 Nominal function of action-denoting lexemes — 110
4.1.1 Actor of the action — 111
4.1.2 Undergoer of the action — 113
4.1.3 Instrument of the action — 116
4.1.4 Object involved in the action — 119
4.1.5 Place of the action — 121
4.1.6 Name of the action — 123
4.1.7 Summary — 125
4.2 Verbal function of object-denoting lexemes — 126
4.2.1 Actor of an action — 127
4.2.2 Result of an action — 129
4.2.3 Instrument, Means or Manner of an action — 131
4.2.4 Object involved in an action — 134
4.2.5 Place of an action — 138
4.2.6 Summary and discussion — 140
4.3 Metonymy and its application — 141
4.3.1 Metonymy in Cognitive linguistics — 141
4.3.2 Metonymy and conversion — 143
4.3.3 Metonymy and flexibility in Classical Chinese — 148
4.4 Summary — 153

5 Pragmatics of flexibility in Classical Chinese: The level of argument structure constructions — 154
5.1 Rule-based interpretation — 155
5.1.1 Lexemes denoting human roles — 156