The editors would like to give a big “THANK YOU” to the contributors of this collection. When we first envisioned this book, it was a simple idea. We wanted to demonstrate to the field the need for further consideration of the work that animals perform in the tourism industry. The authors responded to this goal by going so much further than originally imagined. They have presented work that pushes the boundaries of tourism studies theoretically, implements new concepts, and provides strong cases that implore tourism scholars to initiate more critical investigations.

We must also send a special note of appreciation to our colleagues who acted as reviewers for the chapters in this book. They no doubt helped to strengthen the collection overall with their constructive feedback and sharp insights. In no particular order, we thank: Kellee Caton, Nitasha Sharma, Jane Bone, Kevin Markwell, Kristen Lamoureux, Lauren Duffy, Alana Dillette, Brent Lovelock, Kelly Bricker, Stefanie Benjamin, José-Carlos García-Rosell, and Bryan Grimwood.
